

What to Look For When Hiring a Mover

Moving can be a stressful time. We have all heard the horror stories about movers losing photo albums, damaging TVs, and leaving things behind.

Plus, the cost of moving is usually at least several hundred dollars, and if you are moving cross-country with a lot of things, it can be as high as $11,000. Well, no more horror stories. Whether you are scheduled to move next month or in the next six months, get your boxes in a row with these tips.

Request that your estimate be guaranteed. No one wants to be bushwhacked by a fee higher than the original estimate after the job is complete. Find a mover that will guarantee they won't exceed their estimate.

Review your mover's insurance policy. Movers will often insure your items as part of the moving price. Ask if they calculate their insurance by weight or by the item's value. Educate yourself about the different types of moving insurance, then ask about insurance policies when you compare your estimates. Moving.com offers a program to compare estimates.

Check to verify there are no hidden fees. Movers may charge an extra fee for extremely heavy items, items that need to be dismantled, gas lines that have to be disconnected, traveling up and down flights of stairs, and driveways that are too narrow (the movers have to transport your things to and from the truck rather than pulling up to the entrance). Have a discussion with the movers about these issues when you receive your estimate.

Tip the movers. Don't forget about tipping the movers and providing cold drinks for them. If there are one or two movers, the tip would typically be at least $40 to $60. If there are more than that add $20 per mover.

Compare your estimated value of your belongings to the moving company's. Review the moving contract for its estimated value of your possessions, and compare that to your estimation. If there's a big difference, then consider asking for a different contract or working with another moving company.

Check the movers accepted payment methods. Some moving companies accept credit cards - don't assume your does. Know your options for payment before agreeing to use the moving company.

Get the premium treatment. Some movers will provide you with packing materials as part of the cost of the move. Ask if the packing material will be included in the whole package before buying yards of bubble wrap. Many movers are happy to deliver boxes before the day of your move.
