

“Who writes Kubernetes”

Author: Łukasz Gryglicki (lukaszgryglicki@o2.pl)

This is meant to be a report of a great collection of raw data regarding Kubernetes development activity. There is a brief analysis below, but feel free to leverage table of contents and treat as a 'choose your own adventure' when it comes to the tables of data below.

Since the Kubernetes project started in June of 2014, 2,760 developers from 1181 companies have contributed to it (including its 68 repositories from 3 organizations: kubernetes, kubernetes-incubator, kubernetes-client). A total of 19.3 million lines have been added and 11.3 million removed. In total, Kubernetes consists of about 162.5M LoC (lines of code).

The main kubernetes/kubernetes repository alone has: 1,361 developers, 540 employees, 4.7 M lines added, 3.2 M lines removed, with a repo consisting of about 11.3 M LoC.

However, this is only the best estimate of the data, as many developers were not working for companies but on their own behalf. 80 developers work on their own behalf and we cannot determine affiliation for 44 developers.

This report uses some special values, they are:

(Self) - meaning the developer is working on his/her own behalf and is not paid for work.

(Not Found) - meaning we tried to determine developer affiliation using many sources (like GitHub, LinkedIn, Twitter, Facebook, Clearbit and other commercial databases for enrichment, etc.) but were still unable to locate.

Key findings:

- 2,760 developers from 1,181 companies
- Top 10 companies sponsoring Kubernetes are: Google, Red Hat, CoreOS, Microsoft, ZTE, Mirantis, Huawei, Fujitsu, Weaveworks, IBM, Engine Yard, SOFTICOM
- The rate of development is very high (the velocity is continuously increasing):
  - There were 32,418 commits last year, which yields: 88.76 commits daily (one commit each 16.2 minutes). Last month (June 2017) there were 2,400 commits which yields one commit every 18 minutes (the speed decreased by 10%). In May 2017 there were 3,063 commits, which yields one commit every 14.5 minutes (a 11% increase). Version 1.7.0 was released on June 30th, so the number of commits before final release was slightly smaller. In February 2017 there were 3,325 commits - one commit each 12.5 minutes (which is 30% more than last year average 76/2016 - 96/2017)
  - There were 10,701 commits in single kubernetes/kubernetes repo last year, which gives: 29.3 commits daily (one commit each 49 minutes). During last month (June 2017) there were 636 commits which gives one commit per 68 minutes. In May 2017 there were 1044 commits, which gives one commit per 43 minutes.
  - Main Kubernetes repository is also very active, there were over 308 thousand GitHub events during last year (that means PRs, issues, commits and comments) and over 31 thousand last month (June 2017), which also means about 21% more speed last month.
- Average release time is about 100 days (ranges from 77 for v1.0.0 -> v.1.1.0 to 172 for v1.1.0 to v1.2.0)
- Kubernetes consists of 3 GitHub organizations and 68 repositories.
- 5.5% of people (by the number of commits on all Kubernetes repositories combined) work on their own behalf, we also have 0.3% developers with no known affiliation, so this number can be from 5.5% to 5.8%. The rest - 94.2% - 94.5% of people work for companies.
- 4% of people (by the number of commits on main Kubernetes repository) work on their own behalf, we also have 0.2% developers without known affiliation, so this number can be from 4% to 4.2%. So 95.8% - 96% of people work for companies.
- 3.7% of people (by the number of LoC on all Kubernetes repositories combined) work on their own behalf. So 96.3% of people work for companies. Developers without known affiliations are about 0.03%.
- 4.3% of people (by the number of LoC on main Kubernetes repositories combined) work on their own behalf. So 95.7% of people work for companies. Developers without known affiliations are about 0.03%.
- Google, Red Hat, CoreOS and Microsoft together make 77.5% changesets and 79.8% lines changed in main kubernetes/kubernetes repository (67.7% and 83.2% of all 68 repositories respectively). There are also smaller companies involved, so it can be assumed that at least 94% of the project is sponsored and paid for.

There are about 2,900 commits between releases, but this number is increasing steadily. It was 2,112 between v1.0.0 and v1.1.0 then 4,435 between v1.5.0 and v1.6.0.

Numbers of lines added: 433 thousand on average - seems stable. The number of lines removed is about 321 thousand between releases.

Release Frequency (this is all for main kubernetes/kubernetes repository):

Average release time is about 102 days (ranges from 77 for v1.0.0 to v1.1.0 to 172 for v1.1.0 to v1.2.0)

Source Size:

This table shows how many files are present in Kubernetes releases and how many Go source code lines.

Release	Lines of Go source code	Number of files	Files added/removed
v0.2	103,864	998
v1.0.0	821,417	6,671	5,673

We can see a steady increase in both source code lines and the number of files from v1.0.0 to v1.5.0. Release v1.6.0 was focused on cleaning up sources.

Who does the Work:

The number of distinct developers and companies who developed from previous to given release.

We can see an increase in the number of developers working on next releases and companies (version v1.2.0 was developed about 1.8 times more than others so it is breaking the trend).

Contribution by Company v1.7.0

We can see that Google is a top contributor in all releases.

Analyzing number of changesets we can see that Google contributions trend is falling down.

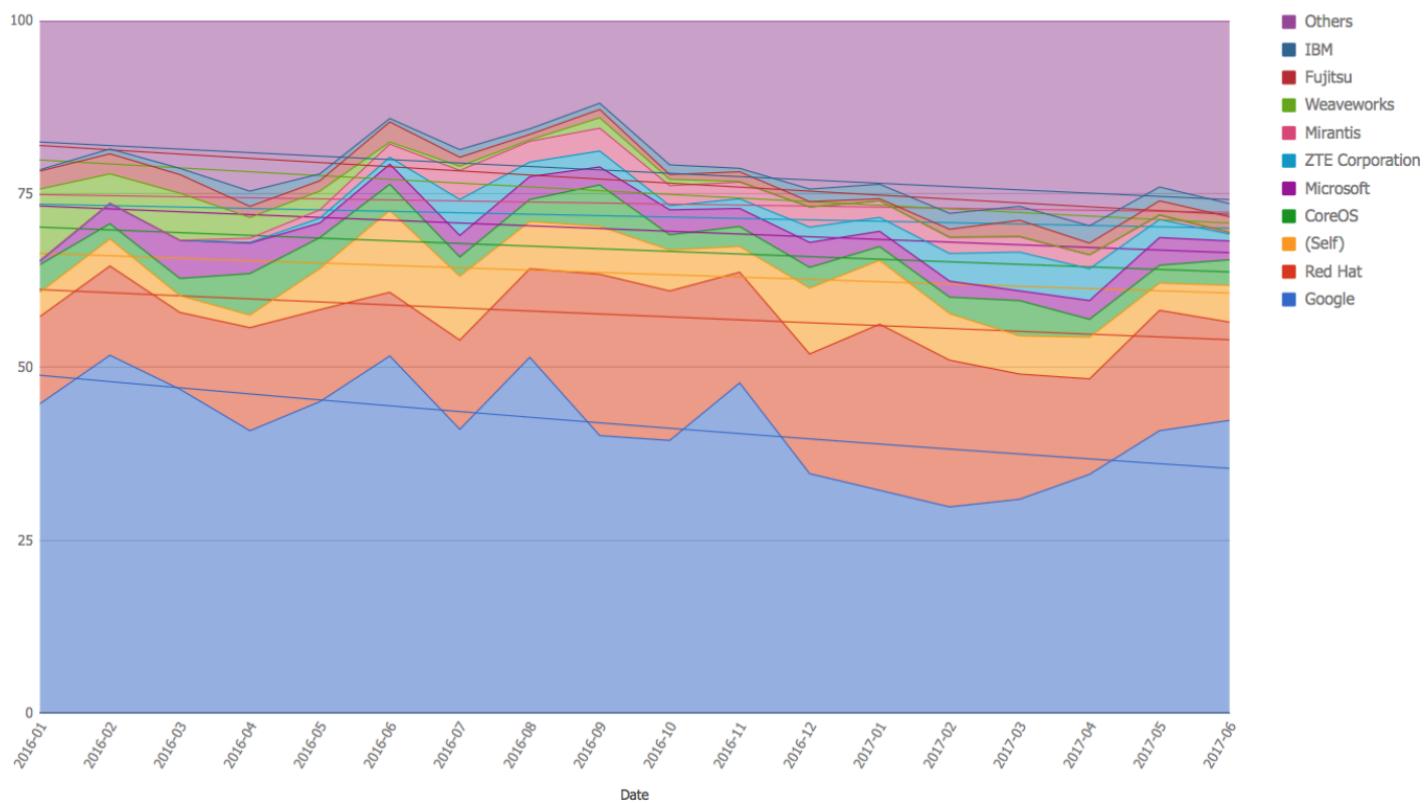

This is a stacked chart of companies contributions starting from 2016.

Two main contributors Google and Red Hat both have downtrend, while there are more & more new companies each month.

Google trendline is falling down, while we can see that Red Hat and Others gain.

Number of Google contributions is growing, but slower than Red Hat & Others.

We can see steady decrease of Google's percent of contributions, Red Hat & Others are growing.

Changesets grouped per company for releases:

In this unstacked chart we can see that Google contributions are clearly falling while almost every other company is growing.

Changesets per company stacked for releases:

For each developer, we're trying to determine His/Her employer by:

- Asking commercial database clearbit
- Determining employers by email domain name
- Checking Stackalytics data JSON
- Determine employer by manually researching developer first, last name and email on Google, Github, LinkedIn, Facebook etc.
- Asking developer via email
- Finally, there are still some unknown developers grouped under “(Not Found)” and some developers are working on their own behalf (grouped as “Self”).
