

How To Raise Pigs For Profit

When taking the decision to get into raising domestic swine for meat you have to know that raising pigs needs more deliberation then you can certainly think. There are a lot of things to consider before you get started in your journey. Below is a set of the items a new farmer should consider when raising swine for meat.

- 1) The 1st thing you should do is to seek advice from your local agency to enquire if you are allowed to raise any type of livestock in your place of residence. Some places have some requirements in place before they permit you to raise livestock.
 - 2) You should plan ahead about how many pigs you planning on raising with regards to the amount of land you have. 55 square feet for the shelter is usually needed. You must also look at how much money you are prepared to spend when starting out with your farm. Starting out with 2 or more swines will definitely cost you more then beginning of with one pig. But a good amount of pigs to get started on of with is two. With 2 pigs you can be able to monitor them and make sure they get enough nutrition's and care. Once you get used to caring for them you can then add more swine.
 - 3) Before your pigs are delivered you should be sure you build some shelter for them. A durable pen would be an ideal choice. The pen will protect your swine from hot and cold temperatures and also from unwanted intruders. Make it a point that the pen is large enough to house the swine even as they grow bigger. The pen should also be big enough to house the pigs food and water equipment.
- The pen house must have a fence built around it to allow the swine to enjoy the outsides but at the same time be safe and not disappear.
- 4) When raising pigs for meat its no question that nutrients play a huge role. So make sure that the swine are receiving the right amount nutrients. The best feed for swines is grains and they are supplied in form of mash and pellets. You can also go for organic ways of feeding but this will cost you more.
