

Daily life/lived experience

Question 1: How is the above concept visible in the three articles? List phrases or examples.

- Diversity of experience in mobility
 - Diversity of experience in citizenship/inclusion/belonging
- Routinization of movement of disabled bodies; that is, when, where, how they move are socially regulated
- "If we review the development of disability and the mobile phone, we find that mobilities are present from the inception" (Goggin, p. 538).

Question 2: Summarize Group 1's work in a few sentences.

Depending on the corporeal abilities of individuals, they experience mobility differently. Everyday technologies regulate the level of inclusion and exclusion of disabled bodies from (social) life. Mobile phones are not a neutral technology, but rather actively produce new (im)mobilities.

Question 3: How does the above concept relate to mobility justice as seen in the three articles?

Being able to access transport/mobility equally
Larger scale than transport

Grocery store (Gaete-Reyes article),

Urban environment is more than just trains and buses. Ramps are good on buses, but what about when people want to go across the street to grab food, go to the park or bar after work, and the pavement is bad, sidewalks are in poor conditions.

Question 4: What about the above concept is uniquely revealed through studying the experiences of disabled people?
