Silvia Passiflora is a triple Grammy-considered artist, genre originator, and founder of Scriptaluna — an independent creative house for poetry, sound, and story. Based in Nashville and rooted in Atlanta, Silvia performs original spoken-word concertinas: short-form, emotionally potent pieces blending poetry, folk vocals, and acoustic intimacy. Her work gave birth to a new genre she calls Florentinae — sacred, slow-burning compositions anchored in memory, grief, and blooming.

Her sound sits within the Southern Gothic tradition — but through a decolonial lens that centers feminine authorship, ancestral knowledge, and outsider reclamation. In Pokeberry Letter, for example, Silvia sings a timeless love ballad set during the Civil War — playing banjo as a Filipina-American woman, embodying a voice that was never meant to survive that story. The result is haunting, tender, and quietly radical.

She has written over 70 original songs and more than 700 poems, archiving her creative migration through The Flower's Almanac — a self-published lyric journal chronicling movement between cities, family roots, and artistic form. The project parallels her personal shift from Atlanta to Nashville and her broader mission: to create a literary and musical legacy outside conventional systems.

Her debut EP Incarnata is submitted for Best Folk Album, while Florentinae, her upcoming genre-named collection, is submitted for Best Spoken Word Poetry Album. She filed a federal trademark in June 2025 to protect Florentinae as both title and form.

Silvia's Grammy campaign is not just an artistic statement, it's a blueprint for safe passage. With no label, no marketing firm, and no backing machine, she is showing that Grammy-caliber work can be created with a voice, a laptop, and a clear artistic vision. By publishing outside traditional industry pathways, Silvia Passiflora is building a route for others to follow.
