

It is not up to Báñez to leave at six

The employer and social partners do not need the approval of the Minister of Employment, Fatima Báñez, to negotiate when the end of a worker's work day. If until now they have not reached an agreement so that it finishes at the six of the afternoon, is because the businessmen consider that this would generate losses in practically all the guilds. The announcement made yesterday by Fatima Báñez in this sense is pure demagoguery. Only the officials comply with an intensive day of tomorrow, which, by the way, does not benefit us. I remember when they began to put doctors of bedside in afternoon schedule and at a stroke they solved much of the sanitary collapse. They should have applied this same measure in the courts, municipalities and other public institutions, because they are stuck precisely because their schedules are too restrictive. Claims must be dealt with at the time they are filed. Especially if we talk about private companies. Downshifting the blind always leads to bankruptcy.
