

My work at PCC and beyond

Even though I have had many health challenges over the past five years, I have also experienced a professional blossoming: deepening my full-time work as an adult education instructor in ABECC (where I have taught for 26 years), helping design and implement a statewide adult ed training in 2020 after participating in a federal pilot training, presenting extensively since 2020 at local/state/national conferences on the topic of incorporating sustainability into adult ed curricula while fostering student leadership, writing an article on that topic which was published in the journal of the largest national adult education professional organization (COABE), serving on PCC's Climate Action and Sustainability Plan (CASP) team since its inception a few years ago, currently serving as one of the Faculty Fellows in Sustainability, and continuing to work with a national networking group focused on environmental sustainability within adult education programs. I've also done other advocacy-related work within the Tucson community during this time. I appreciate any support you can offer me, to help me stabilize and heal further. and continue to do good work.
