Hi everyone, this is a document that should be read before you start trying to crack the clues! It will clear up some confusing points, establish some ground rules, and hopefully make things go more smoothly.

Using the Clue Form
Each step of the clue has an "integrity check." This is a short request that is prompted above each clue scroll. By examining, looking at nearby items, or identifying nearby NPCs, these checks will ensure that you have found the correct location. The answer to these integrity checks should be easily identified if you are in the correct location. These are not a part of the clues themselves, and should not involve logical thinking. In a few circumstances, they may add additional context to the clue itself.
Upon completion of the last clue, step 8, I will request a screenshot of you at each solution location. This is a final check to ensure that all clues were solved properly. There is not a verification for the final clue, so you may consider sending me the screenshot of your attempted solution of that before any others.

Mimicking OSRS Clues
Clues that involve "dig," "search," or "emote" commands include these only for flavor. They are superfluous to the riddles and serve only to keep the player grounded in what we are used to. Cipher clues, anagrams, and map clues behave exactly as you would expect them to with reference to OSRS clues.

New types of clues
There are at least two clues that do not have similar counterparts in the current clue pool of OSRS. They may involve any number of things, but all parts of the clue are internal only to OSRS. There are no external tools needed and no real life references.
One of these types of clues are the coordinate clues. These refer to a location exactly as expected, but do NOT refer to an area to dig. You will need to do something else at the location, and it is something that can be substantiated through means other than a screenshot. You do not need a space for coordinates.

Conventions
For at least one clue, regional convention is important to the interpretation. For all clues, British convention is used.

Use of the Wiki/Google
This is encouraged and expected! The clues should provide difficulty even when these resources are used extensively.

Areas of the game
Every area of Gielinor is fair game with a few exceptions. First, no clue will take you to the wilderness. Second, there are no locations that are locked behind difficult, end game content. KNOWLEDGE of the endgame content, quests, and lore might be required, but the location you are seeking does not require completion of that content or those quests. A level 3 account would NOT have access to all of the areas required to go, but an early/mid game account with regular progression will easily have access to everywhere. Lastly, the locations are not designed to be frustrating or difficult to get to. There are no clues that lead you to the underground passage, middle of the Elven lands, or Kharazi Jungle (or any of the similarly frustrating places to go).

Items and purchases
There may be some items required to solve the clues that are not readily available in a standard player's bank. The total amount of money invested in the entire challenge is well under 50k and no one purchase is more than 25k. All things that need to be purchased can be found at well known, easily accessible shops.

Final Step
The final step is fitting of a final step-- it takes longer to prepare the solution even if you know exactly what to do. A few notes on a proper solution: It is only one action in only one location. You need to use all of the information on the clue to set up for that action, but the end result is a single screenshot in a single location. I will be able to tell if you have used all parts of the clue (a subtle hint-- when you correctly crack a part of the clue there should be some lasting impact on your character that will be carried forward into the final screenshot!)

The link to the form that contains the clues is found below! Good luck, have fun, and please give me feedback through Discord.
