Unfortunately, people judge others, and it makes people insecure or anxious, sometimes seriously impacting their mental health. In order to avoid being judged, people change their opinions and their ideas to fit in with groups. People who stand out from a group are often not treated well and will do anything to avoid it. According to "Herd Behavior" and "The Party," people can impact others in a negative way.

To start off, the article "Herd Behavior" illustrates the idea that people can impact others in a negative way "Herd Behavior" The article explains the way that animals and humans often follow others because they don't want to feel left out. It includes an explanation about the words "herd behavior". (Commonlit 1) "The term also applies to human behavior and usually describes large numbers of people acting the same way at the same time. It often has a connotation of irrationality."(CommonLit 1). Human behavior affects people by changing their perspective when the larger group has the popular opinion. People do what everyone else is doing, even if it's not logical.Herd behavior affects people and animals by influencing them to choose the more popular option. When people follow the group, it shows that people can impact others in a negative way because it can convince them to believe something that is not true.

In addition, the short story "The Party" illustrates the idea that people can impact others in a negative way. "The Party" The text tells a short story about a girl who doesn't get invited to a party that all of her friends are going to. She believes it's her fault because she didn't get invited. She blames herself about her appearance and not getting invited leaves her feeling insecure. "Why hadn't she invited me? My feet were too big? No. Maybe. My face was broken out? Who wants someone with acne at her party? Why did she invite every person in my group except me?"(Munoz Ryan 2). When the narrator blames herself for all of these "problems" that she can't really change and lets her self esteem go down to the ground. When people get left out it often makes them feel terrible and start to blame themselves. It shows that it can impact them in a negative way by making them feel bad about themselves. The evidence explains that she was bringing herself down because she didn't get invited.

To conclude, people should not let other people dictate how they feel or what they do. People's actions can impact people's mental health and opinions about themselves. Imagine if no one judged each other. People can impact others in a negative way and change the way they think.
