

Jamal Eason is a Group Product Manager at Google. He leads a Android product team which is responsible for setting the product roadmap and features that help Android app developers make great apps for the billions of Android users. Prior to Google, he worked at Intel Corporation in a range of roles from business development, marketing, plus venture capital investing into startups with Intel Capital. Jamal previously worked as a product manager at a mobile app startup, and was a telecommunications military officer in the US Army with military deployments to Germany and Iraq.

Outside of work, Jamal is active in the Harvard Business School community. He is a current HBS career coach to hundreds of students & alumni, active donor and a part of the HBS Fund Investors Society, and an alumni recruiter for the HBS joint MS/MBA program. For HBSAAA, he is a lifetime member and was a part of the HBSAAA leadership transition committee. Currently, Jamal serves as the Technology Officer for the HBSAAA where he revamped the technology operations, electronic voting and online donation systems for the organization. Outside of HBS, Jamal led the alumni board for the San Francisco Alumni Chapter of Management Leadership for Tomorrow (MLT) for over 10 years and currently served on the Board of Directors for Open Up Resources, which is focused on increasing equity in education with digital curriculum.

Jamal earned a bachelor's degree in computer science from the US Military Academy (West Point), a master's degree in information technology from UMUC, and a MBA from Harvard Business School.
