

The Impact Of Not Having Phones At School

Jordyn Grant

Kendall College and Career Academy

Columbia University

Ms. Koletar

January 26, 2024

How would you feel if your own cell phone was taken from you in school? How would you feel if cell phones were banned in school? This happens everyday and is a problem world wide. I believe we need to put a stop to it. In this essay I am going to talk about why cell phones should be allowed in school and why they should be used during the school day. The first reason is if there was an emergency and you needed to get in contact with your parents, you would be able to. Another reason is that cell phones can be used for learning opportunities. The last reason is that cellphones can help students communicate. This is why kids should be able to use cell phones at school.

My first reason is that during an emergency kids should be able to call their family. An example is if there is a lockdown. If the students don't have their phones they cannot tell their parents what is going on and if they are ok. Evidence states, "In a lot of school emergencies, fires, gas leaks, or injuries are super dangerous but having access to a phone can be an amazing resource." This proves that in situations phones are the best option to ensure that your child is ok. If they are not allowed to have a phone, their parent or guardian will not know if they are safe. Another piece of evidence is, "Cell-phones give the students a stronger feeling of safety if they know that a family member is only one call away in an emergency." This shows that students feel safer having a phone with them.

My second reason is that cell phones can occasionally be distracting, but schools should allow them because they can be beneficial for learning. This means that they can help students learn. Evidence states, "That cell phones allow a value of freedom and connection to students and teachers and more options for learning." This proves that having a cellphone can help students learn. Another piece of evidence is, "Letting students use their phones for interactive classwork and activities is an amazing way to keep them present and raise participation in the class.” This continues to prove that having a cellphone will help students learn in the classroom.

My third reason is that cellphones help students communicate. According to “Caddell Prep,” they state, “Cell phones may also be utilized to communicate with classmates about suggestions and feedback. For instance, a student can use their mobile phone to communicate a brilliant project proposal to their peers who are absent from class.” This helps students communicate. Another reason why cellphones help students communicate is because there are many apps that help translate languages. There are many students who speak different languages and by having an app that can translate will help classmates talk to each other.

The conclusion is to let students bring in their phones to school. It can make a big impact on students. First it is good to have them for safety reasons. Secondly, cell phones have learning benefits. Lastly, cell phones help students communicate. I hope you agree with me.