✓	Other Considerations: (highly recommended to enhance your documentary, but not required.)
	My/our documentary features interviews with topical experts, elected officials, and/or people directly impacted by my chosen documentary topic. Make sure to identify who is speaking, and their title, if applicable.
	My/our documentary features supporting b-roll footage related to my documentary. B-Roll footage can be anything related to the topic you are discussing and is used to add additional visual interest, or provide additional visual context.
	My/our documentary features copyright-free music that doesn't overpower interviews or voiceovers . Make sure to reduce volume of background music when people are speaking - the information being presented is of higher importance than any background music.
	My/our documentary features narration. Consider recording yourself speaking on camera but if you are uncomfortable doing that, audio narration can really help tie the various elements of your documentary together. You must write your own scripts to avoid plagiarism, and while you may certainly use sources from your research to inform your narration, you must put that information in your own words.
