

I thought I lost my mind. I was at Vector Arena because I was going to be attending a concert. I entered the arena and it was completely blacked out. I walked further into the darkness and I approached a greenish kind of light. I was confused so I walked into that light and I suddenly saw people dressed up in weird gaming characters. It was if I was having an anxiety attack because I really wanted to go to the concert. I spoke to the lady at the Reception (Zoey) she had informed me that the concert was last night due to the event that was on today.

During my conversation with Zoey some man dressed in a black suit approached me. He was the Chief Executive of Events NZ. He said that there was an error with the announcement on Social media and he also said that I wasn't the only one that missed out. He informed me that they had negotiations with JCKL (the music group I was going to see) that there was an error with the announcement. He asked JCKL if they could perhaps perform one more time for those who missed out on seeing him. JCKL instantly replied and said "YES! Of course, We'll do anything for our fans". I was delighted to hear the news, the concert was at 7pm.

I arrived back at Vector Arena, it was so packed. It was awesome to see people dressed in their JCKL clothes. We were all standing while JCKL hopped on stage. We all excitedly cheered for them, their first song was going to be a mash up of 2 songs (Poetic Justice and Crooked Smile), this was the best way to start off the concert. Throughout the concert they performed some of their classic songs. It was a great opportunity for me and all the fans that missed out.
