PERSONALITY

Attentive	Undaunted	Just	Caring
*Phlegmatic	Pragmatic	Reserved	Stoic
Adamant	Stern	Impatient	Snappish

If one were to accurately describe Xin, one may say that he is just an old man stuck in the body of a rabbit. Perhaps it's one of the canon's cruel sense of humor or just unfortunate luck, but regardless of what the cause is, Xin is surprisingly extremely *composed - if not, **sensible - despite circumstances.

With a stern look on his face and an adamant attitude, one might expect him to be the least sociable fable on the planet, with strict predicament and a stricter schedule. While it is half true, Xin is surprisingly mellower than his face gives out. While he doesn't show it, he cares more than you think. He shows his affections through blurbs of wisdom, small talk, and small acts of service; and while he cannot get rid of that hardened expression, he will do things within his ability and powers to make others feel understood - if not, seen - in this realm of Fables.

Regardless of tales or origins, Xin is a businessman (or business bun?) down to the fault. Attentive to his clients and duties; this rabbit offspring settles his affairs with a stoic face and a just attitude, carefully explaining and departing wisdom in a way which is comprehensible and digestible. This sense of rationality and responsibility is also what gets him through most of the hurdles in his life. From the way he sees things, all issues are meant to be resolved regardless of its severity, and with this mindset in tow allows him to feel surprisingly undaunted whenever a huge case or task arises out of the blue.

Despite his benevolent nature and his reservedness to himself and folks around him, this white rabbit is far from perfect. With timing being of his very essence, it is normal to see this bunny becoming impatient when things do not go according to plan. In fact, he would rather take a more common methodology or opt out entirely, for everything is being accounted for within his schedule he calls his life. With restlessness can come irritability, and while he may do a good job at hiding it, no one can deny becoming snappish the moment someone rubs him the wrong way.

🐰 HISTORY 🐰

tldr; Xin and his mother immigrated overseas to Fabletown, USA, to escape harsh circumstances back at home. While living and growing up, Xin founded a new family, got a decent education, and took part in the community's activism. Now as a working member of society, he has a high- paying job, got married, and watched as his kid grew up before heading off to college.

"Remember my son, when I say this with the uttermost respect,"

"We live to serve monarchs, and will continue pursuing their vision until the very end."

"Never forget that."

Once upon a time, in a land not too far from here, there lived a White Rabbit offspring and his mother [REDACTED]. The two lived in relative discomfort, all resulting from the harsh conditions of [REDACTED] fable fate and turmoil.

[REDACTED]

Criticism and noise lashing back and forth, and promptly, the string on the camel's back snapped accordingly. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] How could she support those she trusts without spiraling both of them into danger? She has heard the stories of a land of opportunity from her relatives, where offprints of all fables can live freely without living in fear of becoming [REDACTED] a filler on the text. However, was it fact? Or fiction? She had confirmed her suspicions over this land's existence over months of silent listening, and it wasn't until a kind fable offprint held out their hand for the mother to grab. [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] The offprint's mother grabbed hold of the stranger along with her son onto a plane with their life savings, a forged visa, and the stolen glamour on their backs into a new and foreign land: America. [REDACTED]

As soon as the rabbits (glamoured as mundies head to toe) landed on American soil, their former identities were scrapped entirely. The worker led them into a building with papers and documents of all kinds. The training in Anglo-linguistic his mother entrusted with the rabbit offprint has proven itself useful all this time. With documents signs and fees waived, the agents welcomed their newest residents: Alice and her son Caspian Xin.

And the sun shone exactly like the one back home.

The biggest change that could be noted from the rabbits were how busy the two of them would be trying to settle in their role within Fabletown. They had no other family except the company of their own, as well as no stable income nor enough belongings to fit in two suitcases. Having landed rock bottom, they did what they did the best any rabbit could do: dig, that digging upwards. While his mother juggled through jobs here and there in order to make ends meet, Xin also tagged along for the ride, taking up small odd jobs here and there in order to add a little to their small pile of funds. Here and there, Alice and Xin zipped all across town with parcels or books on paw, garnering a reputation of being the typical busy buns of Fabletown, and the run did not stop even after Alice met the love of her life one fateful delivery day.

The lover in question was a Peter Rabbit offprint by the name of Patrick Chu, and not long after their initial meeting, the two finally wedded with Xin in tow. Not long after the marriage, Xin would be greeted by the extended relatives encompassing all things lagomorphic; surrounded by cousins, aunts and uncles, half-siblings and friends. No longer was Alice and Xin alone in this new environment, but now part of a tight-knitted family and community of their own.

Life after his mother's second marriage was breezier than usual. However, that doesn't exactly mean that it came without problems. With making ends meet becoming a secondary concern, the main issue - at least through the eyes of Alice - was integrating Xin on the same path as his grandfather: the original White Rabbit himself. While Xin is still in the midst of his childhood, he was essentially a prodigy child with a favorable temperament, good grades, and top of his class on the track field. With how promising this child's track record was in the chatty and bustling Chu family, it was to no surprise to see Xin earn a full-ride scholarship to Everlorn University. Yet here is Alice Chu, requesting her son to follow suit her father's steps in serving monarchs and CEOs.

He had to laugh, but dared not to in front of his mother. He could become a CEO himself with the promising talent he has shown in his class, why would he serve another when he himself worked so hard to get where he landed?

Upon graduating highschool and one last summer at the lively home of the rabbits, the white rabbit offprint packed up his things and left the nest for the second time of his life.

Something went wrong not long before he entered Everlorn. Was it a change in style? Or was it something in the air? Regardless, nobody expected a straight laced student to suddenly be decked head to toe in leather and studs. Upon his admission, he finally realized that the major issues plaguing his life wasn't to fill his grandfather's shoes, but rather the social economic laws which affected the lives of him and his family - Especially those mandatory glamour laws eating up their hard earned working wages with no signs of regulation and intervention. Call it an epiphany or call it student body propaganda, but after the veil was lifted from his face. He had to work twice if not thrice as hard to get to where he is, his family suffering a similar fate the moment they even step their paws out the house. Rage boiled within, forcing him and a couple others with a similar philosophy to rev their motorcycles and carry out pickets advocating for change.

But like any sort of hostile group greeted by the face of authority, his plight for demanding change was quickly sorted out like dirty laundry as he was escorted to the back of the cop car with miniature handcuffs. With rumors of the straightlaced Xin being towed to the county jail, news eventually winded up at the ears of the Chu's, leaving his siblings to gawk at this odd turn of events and his parents horrified that their star child landed in the pound. Two elderly rabbit offprints begged officials for forgiveness, further digging through their pockets for any remaining funds to pay for bail. However, it was difficult to fight for the rights of his folks when they're taking the blow. After this initial lock-up as well as a half-hearted vow to "never do such a reckless thing again", Xin scratched them off his emergency contacts, and replaced them with his more open-minded siblings, happy to laugh at his plight demanding for change during the further years studying for his bachelors in finance.

Of course protesting, studying, and causing noise violations weren't the only things Xin was doing during his time in Everlorn. Leaving the nest gave him opportunities to visit places which he'd never imagined visiting, make friends in both the highest and lowest of places, as well as meet his friend and future wife: Catherine Tsukino.

While their initial encounter was anything but impactful, their friendship wasn't. The two have been through thick and thin, and both enjoyed the company of each other from the jokes they shared and the stories of their lives they witnessed on the daily. Pure as their friendship, things are meant to eventually drift apart, with talks lessening day by day as Xin went off to finish his bachelors and Catherine furthering her studies within the culinary industry in a well-known trade school halfway across the country.

A few years may have passed since Catherine's departure, but a lot has occurred over those "few" years. For starters, Xin has retired from his protesting once his parents caught him back at the pound again, replacing his visible stances for activism for other subtle forms such as petition signings and other civil volunteer work . Other than getting an earful of nagging and other worrisome comments, he graduated, got his bachelors, and secured an entry-level position at a promising financial firm with the plan of further pursuing his education towards a masters. And with no other plans except for stagnation based on his own accord, he was on the brink of almost resigned to his own Canon, praying (if not hoping) that his fate might meet a merciful leader than a ruthless one.

Never had he thought the trajectory of his carefully laid out plan would change the moment he crossed paths with Catherine again. This time, heavy in the heart and round in the belly.

While the story leading to this ordeal might have been long, Xin [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] [REDACTED] felt sympathetic. She was young, fell in love, eloped, and yet was pressured by her in-laws to leave their son with the looming threat that they would make her pay. The story, how this panned out, was this all irony to the eyes of fate itself? He felt nauseous, having witnessed his friend forced between a hard place and a rock.

Call him young, or perhaps call him spontaneous, but with his paw against the back of the woman's hand, he whispered a proposition in hopes that she wouldn't refuse.

Xin has dated a couple times in his life, but like all flings, they simply must come to an unsatisfactory end. Perhaps he was a bit of a buzzkill, or perhaps his vibes were a little off putting, but never had anybody thought that he would offer to marry her in hopes that she could slowly get back up on her feet. He had the credibility to give her and her baby everything they needed to ensure stability, having worked in a firm as a financial consultant that earned enough income to support a small family and promised a promotion once he finished attaining his masters. He also had plans of moving out his previous residence in favor of buying a home close to commute, and even further his case by implying that if she found someone to love, he'd agree to an uncontested divorce without the bat of an eye.

A foolish thing to suggest otherwise, but perhaps he had an inkling as to why his step-father proposed to his mother. He awaits her verdict, hardening his heart in preparation for rejection.

But instead, Catherine thought carefully about what Xin was offering. Needing a bit more time to think about this proposal handed to her on a silver tray.

Not even 48 hours later, Xin received a phone call. "Yes. Yes, I will marry you. But I would still like to finish up my education after the baby is due. Is that ok? "

"That's perfectly fine by me."

One small courthouse wedding and weeks of finalizing the purchase of a townhouse a few blocks away from the Enchanted outlets, the rabbit couple moved into their new home, hoping that their future together may be comfortable at the very least.

Not long after settling down - on a late winter nonetheless - Charlotte Tsukino was born. Nestled in her mother's arms with rosy locks and the softest blue eyes, Xin made a vow to himself. He will stick by Catherine and Charlotte's side no matter the means necessary. The gears of his mind churned for ways to ensure that Charlotte could live the rest of her lives comfortably. No, scratch that: luxuriously, with nothing but a silver spoon feeding her at any given opportunity. He was bewitched by this delicate little rabbit-fairy hybrid the moment he laid his eyes upon her, and he would do anything within his ability to be the father figure she so desperately deserved.

Perhaps the Canon was right all along, with a bit of subtext added that was. He was a foolish White Rabbit working his mightiest to support the Queen of Hearts; supposedly the Princess of his Heart that is called his daughter.

Years have come and go in the blink of an eye. Who knew that he would prove his younger self wrong over all the trials and tribulations set out between him, his family, and the world. Glamour laws have become better than before (although it could be better), a promising candidate was elected in office not too long ago, but most importantly: the three were thriving.

Xin got his masters and that promotional raise, rose to the ranks of his former workplace, and surged forth to better places, landing himself at none other than the Golden Tortoise Financial Services as a seasoned financial advisor, a position he prides himself despite not showing for it. While his activism for the civil affairs of Fabletown has simmered down significantly, that doesn't exactly mean that he has stopped thinking about the wellbeing of the community (he just happens to prioritize his family more).

His wife Catherine, having graduated culinary school with honors, lived out her dreams creating pastries for one of the many bakeries Fabletown had to offer. Their friendship slowly evolved from passing simple glances at each other to the both of them loving each other from the moon and back.

And his daughter grew up beautifully, flourishing off of the love and support given to her by both friends and family. Within the blink of an eye, this bundle of joy blossomed into a charming young lady, having garnered an interest in fashion design and all things beautiful.

Now in her 20's, she set forth to Everlorn in hopes of pursuing her dreams supported by her parents.

But even when seeing her daughter shrink smaller and smaller from the distance between them, he cannot help but feel the giant elephant in the room: the rise of Grimm attacks happening in Fabletown is something nobody should joke about. Now that his daughter left the nest with high hopes, he must carry on with his life with precaution and vigilance.

For now he'll simply stick with his agenda. For as long as he walks this earth, he will continue to do his work harder and more diligently in hopes that his family doesn't suffer the same hardships as his predecessors nor fall into the looming impending threat overshadowing them altogether.

Never again.

♠ TRIVIA ♡

LIKES	DISLIKES
His Family   While he may not express it, Caspian is head over heels over his loved ones. They're his pride and joy. Be sure to befriend them, and cause them no harm.	Being Restrained   While he cannot escape his fate of being his origin's descendent, he can at least live his life fulfillingly by creating his own terms and conditions.
Timeliness   A fable-oriented interest further appreciated over time. Nobody likes being late when there's much that needs to get done.	Traffic   The nemesis of "promptness". If he knew that "tardiness" will spiral into "lateness", he might as well make a run for it.
Hot Caffeinated Beverages   A staple to the common working man (or working fable). A day without a piping hot cup of tea or coffee is like a night without the moon.	Being Picked Up   While he may be cute in his fable form, he is still very much a grown man. Having this rabbit hop onto your lap is something earned through trust.
Milk Candy   A comforting taste which reminds him of home. He's still fond of the taste despite his age.	Mushrooms (culinary)   Still cannot get use to the texture. He begrudgingly tolerates it finely diced thankfully.

Aesthetics | A philosophy he learned to appreciate thanks to his dearest daughter. Affects how he dresses, shops, decorate, and appreciates his surroundings.

The figures in the dark | ???

- I. Caspian has had issues with his vision ever since he was young. He wears prescription glasses whenever he can. Thankfully, this impairment with his sight doesn't affect his ability to see in the dark.
  - ◇ Due to being a bit self-conscious with his glare, he opted for smokey-tinted lens for his glasses.
- II. A big fan of hot caffeinated beverages such as coffees, black or green teas, and herbal infusions. However, he is not really fond of most carbonated beverages.
- III. Is vegetarian as par to his lagomorph roots. This dietary restriction also carries on with his glamour form as well.
- IV. Has a massive family consisting of 4 different generations of lagomorph fable offprints, and that's majorly from his step-father's side. And while he does enjoy his family and would do anything to help them out, he always finds big family reunions to be exhausting.
  - ◇ And while his mother also mentioned her having a huge family growing up, he rather not think of the additional sum to his rabbit family equation.
- V. Has a winning streak as to never being late to any event, deadline, or meeting. He has learned the art of organizing and prioritizing, and would never be caught procrastinating unless any given heed or warning. This doesn't include cancellations requested by him.
- VI. As par tradition, all offsprings of the White Rabbit Origin are bestowed a customized pocket watch meant to be passed down to the next White Rabbit offprint. And while he was given his mother's pocket watch, he plans to hand it over to his daughter Charlotte despite her non-White Rabbit fable origins.
- VII. His Glamour form:
  - ◇ Stands at a height of 6' 3" (190 cm).
  - ◇ Retains nimbleness, but not as intensely as his fable form.
  - ◇ Allows for the digestion of impossible meat (but he would rather steer of that option in his option)

- ◇ Typically has a hair color of a silver blonde/white and eye color of pinkish-red to represent his albinism.
- ◇ However, also comes in an option of having brown eyes and salt and pepper hair if the default is way too uncanny for mundies. (smh ungrateful)
