Everett Sawyer

EST 12-26-2024

Everett Sawyer is a character within NBC's Hannibal Universe. He is a simple medical secretary and to make extra money on the side he provides psychic readings from within his home. Everett lives alone in Dover, Delaware in a small apartment above a garage located in a rural area.

Everett has a talent for divination; specifically Capnomancy, the observation of smoke and Tasseography, the observation of tea leaves, coffee grounds or wine sediments. With his skills he has aided the police in a plethora of missing persons cases returning the bodies home whether they be alive or dead.

Backstory Summary

Everett was born the second child in Dover, New Hampshire to James and Felka Sawyer. His father is a Domsday Prepping Vietnam War veteran struggling with PTSD and later on developed Capgras Syndrome. His mother; a mail-order bride who fled from Poland due to her own familial issues. It is rumored their father had murdered their mother after a severe PTSD episode, sparked by fireworks and nearby gunshots in the forest outside of their home.

After his mother passed away his father had begun to train the children for the end of the world, teaching them a plethora of weaponry, self-defense, how to hunt, fish, and even kill. This training and seeing his own father deteriorate before his eyes led Everett to develop his own mental illnesses and fears. Everett and his sister, Anna, avoided their fathers extremist beliefs the best they could during adolescence, finding solace in their mothers pagan beliefs which they had grown up learning. To this day both are still active practitioners in their respective crafts. The siblings admitted their father into a psychiatric hospital before both moving out of state. James Sawyer is now incarcerated in a psychiatric hospital within the state of New Hampshire.

Everett moved out of his childhood home to Dover, Delaware for college. Once graduating he settled down in his own shabby apartment. He had found himself a position at a local doctors office as a medical secretary. On the side he has picked up the hustle of reading people's fortunes. He had been called out plenty of times for being a fraud but the many reviews from well known members of the city stating that his readings were true tower over said rumors.

Personality

Everett is a naturally confident and capable man, he is able to do many things on his own and take on new tasks with ease and without fear. He has a plethora of hobbies he enjoys such as painting, violin, knitting, herbology and crocheting. He is able to complete tasks without fail and with full control.

Deep down, however, Everett is extremely self-destructive and has strong fears and anxieties about the unknown. He has developed Dermatophagia, a psychological disorder where one eats their own skin. He focuses this habit on his arms, leaving gruesome scars where he had once bitten, gnawed and chewed. This was developed due to his severe anxiety and paranoia that had been induced by his own fathers anxiety and paranoia. Everett is afraid of being poisoned so he has taken it upon himself to ingest small amounts of poison to build up a tolerance, his herbology knowledge is vast which aids him in this, even still, Everett has issues trusting others with his food; often times asking them to try it first or let him observe as they cook.

History

Early Life

Everett was born to James and Felka Sawyer in the city of Dover, New Hampshire. His early life was one full of joy and fun, having a loving older sister and doting parents.

Of course the family had their struggles, having to rely on food stamps and other forms of government assistance to get by. With Felka being an illegal immigrant she was unable to find stable jobs, oftentimes being paid under the table at restaurants, offices and hotels. James was medically discharged from the army after being diagnosed with Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) and Parkinson's Disease which had led him to also be jobless or picking up small odd jobs to support the family. However, he was still receiving payments from the military but that money had gone towards his ever growing weapon collection.

When Everett had turned 8 his father started to develop Capgras Syndrome. He was the first to notice the early signs of the disease, it started when James took Everett on their monthly hunting trip into the forests of New Hampshire. While setting up camp James had struggled to set up the tent, growing more and more frustrated each time it fell over, falling into a rage filled meltdown where he trashed the campsite and ended up breaking his own rifle against a tree. Everett witnessed the rage-filled meltdown, unaware how to help he steered clear, staying to the side in hopes he wouldn't be hurt.

At 10 years old Everett had lost his mother, he and his sister, Anna, had walked in on the corpse sprawled out on the living room floor with their father not in sight. Witnessing her brother's growing panic, Anna took Everett out of the house, protecting the boy.

Adolescents

At 13 Everett and his sister had been in their fathers care for three years, James had closed the children off from the world outside of receiving their education. To Everett the home was turned into a maximum security prison, thousands of locks, security cameras, bars on the windows, the children weren't allowed to leave the house without supervision and leashes. The stress from this lifestyle had taken a toll on Everett, causing the development of Dermatophagia which is a mental illness sparked by anxiety which causes the person to chew, gnaw, and bite at their own flesh in severe cases or high moments of stress; taking part in autocannibalism.

At the age of 15 his father had tried to poison both Everett and Anna, failing in the process. He had only succeeded in making the children sick, the children were never sent to the hospital but instead their father- in a panic -helped the children throw up what they had eaten, eating some of the poisoned food himself so he too could experience the pain his children felt.

If it wasn't for Anna, Everett would have lost himself completely in their fathers paranoia. She remained at home for the sake of her younger brother, reminding him of life outside, life before.

Relationships

Felka Sawyer; Mother

Felka and Everetts relationship was one full of warmth and laughter, when she was alive Felka saw Everett as her precious little prince, the perfect son. Of course she treated Anna the same but she was a 'boy mom' and everyone knew it. If Everett was sent to time out she would sneak him lollipops, sit with him and even bring him things to do for the long hours of sitting in a wooden chair, kneeling on grains of rice or sitting in wet clothes.

Felka defended Everett with her whole being, not allowing James to lay a hand on the boy. She instead would take the punishments if she was able to, not allowing either of her children to witness what she had to endure.

After her death Everett was devastated, it was as though the spark in his eyes vanished. His person had gone.

James Sawyer; Father

James and Everett's relationship is strained, being the only son he had higher expectations than his sister. His father was more strict and firm to Everett, treating the boy like he was a trainee in the army. The man had high hopes for his only son, wanting him to join the military when he was old enough, however, when James signed Everett up for a youth military camp he was denied due to his lazy eye. This was not something that angered James but it was annoying.

As James' illness worsened their relationship only grew more tense with James falling into fits of rage at the smallest inconvenience, the slightest confusion or misunderstanding. Everett was the one who received the punishments, oftentimes taking them for Anna so she wouldn't be hurt.

Now, James has been admitted to an inpatient facility where he receives care dedicated to his specific illnesses. Anna visits her father on good days and calls on bad, encouraging Everett to do the same. Everett does not like to speak with his father, whenever the pair speak it is as though Everett was 13 again, having to act as though James is his Sergeant.

Anna Sawyer; Older Sister

Everett and Anna are extremely close, their bond is what people have called 'unmatched' and 'unbreakable.' Anna's eccentric and extroverted personality meshes well with Everetts more reserved confidence and ambiverted tendencies.

Anna is there to make sure her brother doesn't hide away in his home and become a recluse, she is known to randomly show up at his home to drag him outside for a nice walk in nature or bring him along to a night out on the town with their mutual friends. Or, Anna's own gaggle of friends. Being a loving older sister, she is also known to drop off old favorite meals from their childhood with the understanding her brother is not the type to cook full meals. Anna is one of the only people Everett trusts with cooking his food. Besides himself.

She is here to keep Everett grounded, fearful he will eventually follow the same path of their father.
