Adabyn Ibn Qahir

Birth and Death

1199 IS - ???

Biography

Current reigning Mamur. Adabyn has pursued a 'wait and see' policy towards the Agionists, confident that their faith, full of so many competing 'saints' will inevitably fall to infighting and become weak enough to fall to an easy Wardenite counterattack. This strategy, perceived as passivity by some, eventually led to a falling out with his lieutenant Hārthah.

Eshwo Mesir

Birth and Death

??? ~ 297 IS

Biography

The founder of the Boqqarut Damotada, having unified the region in 258 IS. Seen as an incredibly competent ruler by historians, and laid the foundations for a state which would stand for centuries after his death. Accomplished through a long series of military campaigns, during which he utilized his tactical prowess to revolutionize Damotan warfare. Upon conquering a sizable portion of the region, he managed to unite the rest in a single diplomatic masterstroke, issuing an invitation to all remaining chieftains to meet with him, a conference which would result in a mass declaration of fealty, with Eshwo officially declaring himself Boqqar. Soon after this accomplishment, he assisted in codifying the Mogowai faith, assisting in the creation of the first written form of the Hymns of Heaven, and would use this faith to help control his empire, bringing religious authority to match his secular power. Upon his death, the throne would pass to his designated heir Letanya

Essaid Ibn Yusuf

Birth and Death

926 IS - 966 IS

Biography

Eldest son of Yusuf, Essaid inherited a stable realm with a full treasury, strong armies, and ambitions of finally securing a Wardenite victory in the War in Heaven. Exactly how much blame for losing all four of these rests on his shoulders is a matter of debate. Chroniclers writing during the reign of his two brothers would portray Essaid as a spendthrift and a wastrel, obsessed with gambling and dancing girls. Authors writing during his own reign were, however, far more sympathetic.

His reign is also known for a breakdown in relationship between the Mamuramat and Abdar, as the latter attempted to cement his authority in the east by first trying to get Essaid to cede to him the Mamuramat of the East, and later all but declaring himself a pretender to the title.

Regardless, the division of authority between his brothers Muktafi and Qa'im quickly caused problems, primarily stemming from a rivalry between Essaid and Muktafi that seems to have had origins during their childhood. The feud ignited into all-out war when Essaid sent his chief minister Al Baraqwi with an army to arrest Muktafi in 961. Qa'im, always closer to Muktafi than Essaid, rallied his armies to defend him against his eldest brother. The war dragged on until 966 before Essaid was captured and executed on the orders of Muktafi, who would ascend to the Mamuramat over the corpse of his own brother.

She then began a bloody purge and Civil War against her brothers to ensure they could not threaten her rule, and killed all besides the infant Arthenanas, who was hidden in Kalathipsomi and away from her reach. During this, she genocided the entire Hagedean culture in response to their rebellion, and destroyed the Manathean dynasty for failing to prevent it. Built Maklea's Arena in the Amaria district of Oraispol and rebuilt the city in general, as well as construct the Drakenval to store fallen dragons after one of her brother's attempted to resurrect one. Muktafi Ibn Yusuf

Birth and Death

931 IS - 979 IS

Biography

Muktafi took the throne in 966. The conflict which was rapidly becoming known as the Fratricide War had drained the Mamuramat's treasury and seriously destabilized the administration. To make matters worse, Abdar formally severed all relations with the Mamur, claiming that Muktafi's seizure of power by killing his brother was utterly illegal (which, by most sane readings of Wardenite law, it was), and claimed he was formally assuming the title of Mamur of the East by Principle of Acclaim (a legal contingency intended for possible battlefield disasters, wherein should the Mamur and all possible successors be eliminated, Wardenite soldiers in the field were empowered to acclaim one of their own - in this case Abdar himself - as Mamur)

On the throne, Muktafi proved to be an aggressive but adequately competent Mamur. He is often cited as having been responsible for Abdar's death by assassination in 978 - an accusation which Muktafi himself seems to have felt was a mark of pride since he funded a number of poets who published pieces that directly gloated over how Muktafi had bested the pretender to the Mamur of the East. Much of his reign was however caught up in wrangling with the courts as the fallout from the execution of his brother Essaid continued to spread. Most of his legal defense was based around an increasingly creative use of the Expediency Doctrine. His arguments claimed that Essaid had been functionally insane and in fact a crypto-Ritualist. The danger of this threat meant that he had to act to prevent a mortal threat to the faith and thus could legally bypass the formal process by which the High Judges would normally forcibly abdicate a Mamur incapable of serving. While again, the Mamur proved victorious over the courts, dangerous cracks were beginning to show. In particular, the torturous stretching of the Doctrine of Expediency would haunt his successors.

Muktafi would follow his older brother in suffering a violent death. He is believed to have been stabbed by a poisoned sword wielded by an Abdari partisan and died in agony. In the ensuing panic his brother Qa'im took authority, first as regent (Muktafi's only son was three years old at the time), and later fully assumed the title of Mamur.

Musta'sim Ibn Mutarshid

Birth and Death

1015 IS - 1099 IS

Biography

Following Mutarshid's death in an experiment gone wrong, Musta'sim began his reign by executing Luzzo and appointing one of his favorites, the eunuch known as Rahlat ad-Dawwar (literally Pillar of the State) to the position of Chief Minister. Otherwise he left things much the same as his predecessor had set them up, though he notably disfavored appointing Aversarian Magi into positions of authority. He pursued a series of ambitious programs to encourage pairings between bloodlines known to produce Magi in an attempt to resuscitate the Sirhad (Sarradon's old caste of Magi, effectively defunct as an institution before the Halakdun, absolutely gone after the Downfall.) His programs were of dubious effectiveness, and Musta'sim would be forced from the throne in 1090 by his son Radi, who organized a coup with support from a group of the court's Aversarian Magi. Musta'sim would live out the rest of his days in house arrest, slowly going mad.

Mutarshid Ibn Muktafi

Birth and Death

976 IS - 1049 IS

Biography

Mutarshid is sometimes referred to as the "Mamur with two fathers" in reference to the unusual nature of his upbringing (born to Muktafi, effectively raised by Qa'im).

Mutarshid was largely disinterested in day to day rule, preferring to focus his efforts on magical studies and correspondences with various magi across Aeras. He spent large amounts of money on patronizing Continental Magi, and stocked the court with a revolving door of Aversarian Magi advisors. Day to day affairs were largely delegated to his Chief Minister, a position whose authority would continue to grow over subsequent generations. During his time it was held by a series of eunuchs, most prominently Luzzo Al Keffali (A Chevalien who many suspected was not actually a eunuch, but Mutarshid trusted him too implicitly for the rumors to matter too much)

Nasir Ibn Uthman

Birth and Death

852 IS - 899 IS

Biography

Third of the Tahtalite Mamurs, Nasir's reign saw the rate of expansion of the Mamuramat slow, and apart from a few territories taken in Uraghad by ambitious local commanders few new territories were conquered. Instead, much of Nasir's energies were directed internally in a series of legal disputes as a new generation of jurists began to question the somewhat dubious legality of Tathtali's assumption of the United Mamuramat. He was successfully able to hold off the assault by appealing to the principle of Consent in Command, whereby the consensual marriage of Sanad, serving Mamur of the East, and Tathtali, serving Mamur of the Center, and their mutual agreement that a single heir should inherit both titles made the assumption a legal and legitimate act.

While the dissenters, namely the influential scholar Yusuf al Shirlagi (nisba due to his family's Amsari Siralagi heritage), were defeated, many of their arguments would resurface a few generations later in the buildup to the Kathisti Dissent and the ensuing Tel Merrha revolt. But these events were centuries in the future, and at Nasir's death in 899 the future of Tathtali's Mamuramat seemed bright.

He also proscribed a number of schools as “Radical” including the Tashbari’a in 895

Nicanoneus ‘the Black Sun’

Birth and Death

1/2/1211 IS ~

Biography

Governor-Legon of Katraddia and self-styled Aautokratir of Epavarion (the Ebon League). Was born the youngest son of the Governor of Katraddia in the midst of the Fog consuming the north, and grew up knowing nothing besides death and war. Was leading soldiers before he was a teenager, and took his father's titles after his father and brothers both were killed by Cenware ‘Witch-Breaker’ and his army. Unsuccessfully attempted to cut the Sjalvolki off at the Grey Gates so that he could lead his coalition of Apokiakians and loyal natives west, but was defeated and forced to cross through the Fog to enter Kalathipsomi. Fought his way to the Black Mountains, where he and his army then served both sides in the on-going Black Mountain War.

Killed both Oulnir Gurdurbok and Governor Methiad Dethlycan after tiring of them, became the only Aversarian to defeat Cenware in battle, and then attempted and failed to invade into Chevalie for supplies. Was horribly disfigured there, and forced back to the Black Mountains after great losses, forming Epavarion and preparing a final stand then after. Had children with a camp follower he fell in love with in a rare moment of humanity, but she would die in childbirth and he and his children would grow to hate one another thanks to his poor parenting.

Birth and Death

1/13/1213 IS ~ 10/17/1247 IS

Biography

A Sarridian warlord, Gurdurbok deserted Legio XVII ‘Pathos’ with his fellow clansmen and declared himself an Emperor. He would then battle his rival, Governor Methiad Dethlycan of Kalathispomi, for control of the Black Mountains in the Black Mountain War. Initially ruling in Aautokratir Aeschraes’s name on behalf of Demetros ‘Iron-Spike’ Detheniox, he would cut ties after Demetros’s death in the Vilnian Assault in a letter. Despite being a giant, he was a well-respected philosopher, theologian and poet. After Governor-Legon Nicanoneus ‘the Black Sun’ arrived in the Black Mountains, Gurdurbok and Dethlycan both used him to their own ends, before Black Sun ambushed Gurdurbok and killed him in his estates.

Qa'im Ibn Yusuf

Birth and Death

939 IS - 1002 IS

Biography

Yusuf's third and youngest son, Qa'im was a quiet and contemplative man - and exactly the person the Mamuramat needed after Essaid and Muktafi. Rumored to have never lain with a woman, Qa'im produced no heirs, and upon his death the Mamuramat passed to his brother Muktafi's only child Mutarshid whom he had effectively raised as his own son. Indeed, it is generally believed that Qa'im and his confidant and advisor Dryanius (an exiled Aversarian mage who had taken up permanent residence in Sarradon, the two are believed to have met sometime around 942 IS) were in an exclusive same-sex relationship until Dyranius' death in 1000 IS.

Qa'im's 22 year reign was a calm period that saw peace return to the Mamuramat. It was, however, during this reign that the rate at which leases made to Marcher and Aversarian merchants increased dramatically. Some peripheral territories were also lost, but no significant regions.

R

Radi Ibn Musta'sim

Birth and Death

1067 IS - 1179 IS

Biography

Radi was one of the most powerful magi of his generation, a product of his father and grandfather both succeeding in enticing Aversarian Magi into the court and then marriage with the Mamuramal (I hate this adjective but can't think of an alternative) family. Radi's mother was Arthenix Aspietos, and Musta'sim's mother was Timandaria Aeteos.

His reign began with the relatively bloodless coup against his father Musta'sim, but his first act as Mamur was to organize a far more bloody purge of a faction of Aversarian Magi at his court, whom he claimed had been conspiring with his brother Zayd to overthrow him. Whether the plot actually existed is dubious, and several of the slain Magi had also been among his supporters during the coup just weeks prior. This done, he cemented his power as an ambitious, cold man whose capacity for cruelty only grew with age. His life spanned over a century thanks to his reliance on magical vampirism to extend it. It was rumored that his quest for longevity led him to seek the thirteen abyssal steps before his death, though his limited demonstrated skill in dead magic makes this rumor somewhat dubious, but not entirely out of character.

Radi also engaged in rampant experimentation on his own children, attempting to further purify their bloodlines beyond the marriages he had arranged for them (at great expense) to Aversarian women of good magical pedigree. This was, as it turns out, to his dynasty's ruin. His five most promising sons, Muzaffar, Yusuf, Radi, Radi, and Ithtar would all die well before him, either due to accident, old age, or suspected sacrifice when Radi came to believe they were plotting against him.

As the Saints War began in 1141, Radi, counseled by his Aversarian advisors, was led to believe the Agionists were allies - indeed, practically Wardenites themselves given the Dikaynsianite focus on law codes - who could be used against the Ritualists. He therefore heavily supported the landings and the orders' campaigns against the Ritualists, who had managed to take back much of the east a few decades earlier. Many initial territories controlled by the Colonial Authority were almost literally given away to the Imperials. For instance, the isle of Idhroussna was “sold” for a promise of eternal friendship between the reigning Aautokrator and Radi, though by the time the deal was signed the island had already been under Aversarian control for nearly a decade. As the Agionists would only make a coordinated turn against the Wardenits in 1180, a year after this death, Radi never lived to understand his grave strategic error.

Radi was also confronted with the Kathisti dissent in 1152, which eventually blossomed into a full-scale insurrection against the authority of the Mamuramat in the Tel Merrha revolt in 1155. The Kathisti dissent effectively clarified the alliance that would become the idealist school, though the associations of scholars and judges effectively had been born a few decades earlier.

Despite his ambitions, it was the humble - and disabled - Radi the Youngest who would come to power when the elder Radi’s body finally gave out in 1179.

Tathtali Ibn Yuser

Birth and Death

785 IS - 865 IS

Biography

First Mamur of the Center after the Halakdun, Tathtali was the eldest son of the Mamur Yuser. While he and his father had been on good terms, the sudden violent madness of his father resulted in a civil war between the two. The war culminated in Tathtali killing his father at the battle of Farween in 809. He would later marry Sanad, fundamentally changing the Wardenite faith by uniting the final two Mamuramats into one authority.

His vigorous campaigning and largely successful administration is credited by many as having 'Saved Wardenism' during the era of the Downfall.

Yusar Ibn Manar

Birth and Death

767 IS - 809 IS

Biography

The reigning Mamur during the events of the Halakdun. Yusar is recorded by historians as having been a relatively competent and good ruler. After the Halakdun however, his personality took a radical turn towards the worse. A magi of considerable power, it is believed that Yusar was able to shield himself and his closest family from the worst of the magics unleashed on that day. However, as a consequence he was subjected to near-fatal levels of exposure sickness which permanently altered his personality. He was said to have been subjected to near constant visions, the nature of which he refused to disclose. He also conversed with unseen 'advisors', at whose prompting some of the worst atrocities to come would be carried out. This and the generalized instability of the downfall would eventually cause a revolt led by his son Tathtali to break out, and would eventually lead to his death in 809.

Yusuf Ibn Nasir

Birth and Death

890 IS - 956 IS

Biography

Son of Nasir, Yusuf ascended to the throne at the tender age of 9. The entire Mamuramat held its breath during his eleven year regency, but despite constant fears of a civil war or a reign ruined by youthful exuberance, Yusuf and his loyal regent the eunuch Al-Tuthbi, defied expectations, and he ascended to the Mamuramat at the age of 20 (the minimum age specified in Wardenite law at which someone is legally allowed to hold the title of Mamur without the intercession of a trustee.) He proved a highly competent ruler, succeeding at balancing both the Mamur's legalistic and military responsibilities. In the year 910 IS the Auzanrai Ayyari lords formally accepted Wardenism (though most had already converted by this point) and accepted the Mamur's authority (the formal nature of this agreement should be emphasized. While they paid occasional tribute of soldiers and revenue, the Ayyar were functionally independent, but the agreement was a propaganda coup for both parties, and helped the Auzanrai secure their authority over their rivals). He also succeeded in consolidating Udhaliyya and pushing deeper into Kharadamat, even putting Sophocos under threat and ultimately extracting oaths of submission from the Ritualists in charge of the site - though Wardenite armies would never approach closer than fifty miles to the Tower.

Also of note during his reign was the campaigns of Abdar Sarhadyn - known as the Godrender. While the Wardenite warlord was acting on his own initiative and with little actual assistance from the Mamur, Yusuf was quick to legitimate - and in propaganda, appropriate - his campaigns in the far east against the Ritualists.

Yusuf's reign saw a cultural and economic renaissance for which he is still remembered. However, these accomplishments are overshadowed by his complete failure to manage the succession. Rather than strongly support a single son to succeed him, he attempted to divide authority between his three eldest legitimate children Essaid, Muktafi, and Qa'im. Some Traditionalist scholars interpret this as having been an attempt to devolve the Mamuramat into its primordial state and thus see Yusuf as something approaching a saint. Most others recognize it as a disastrous misstep that resulted in a devastating civil war that began less than a decade after his death.

In 910, as one of his first acts, he revoked Nasir's proscribed schools list, and essentially declared the Tashbari'a School to not only not be radical (and thus illegal), but filled four High Judgeships with the school's members, overnight turning them into one of the most influential legal schools in the Wardenite world
