

Me:

Hi! My name is Beatriz Rocha and I have a few questions for you.

Does your film planning feel unorganized? Do you use a prehistoric camera?

Do you want to improve your editing skills? Well we have the solution for you.

In my recent film "My Sweet Melody," I utilized the website Blogger dot com. A website designed to make a creative blog with the layout of your choice! Throughout the entire process of creating my film, I blogged about my process of planning, research, casting, filming, editing, and basically everything known to man.

I also used Google Docs to plan my film! I created character analysis sheets for both my blog and the actors of my films. In fact I even wrote out this very script, which isn't cheesy at all, on that very website!

Next up, let's talk about hardware and software. Thanks to this class, I have an adobe subscription paid for by the county. Adobe has an amazing program called Premiere Pro, where you can learn to edit your films with ease! Or maybe... not so much ease if you're a beginner like me. But that's why the amazing world of YouTube exists! There are thousands upon thousands of video tutorials to learn how to use the program, including how to import footage, use effects, and edit color schemes.

Furthermore, YouTube also has a separate site called YouTube studio, where you can browse for copyright free music for your incredibly low budget amateur films, just like me!

For example, this is a clip from my film "My Sweet Melody," where I used the song Snow Peaks part 1 by Chris Haugen, taken from YouTube studio.

And last but not least, the amazing Canon EOS Rebel T1i camera.

While it has an exhausting name to say, it can capture great footage, and it was the exact camera I used when shooting my own film.
