

To sum up, we have studied four possible explanations of why humor exists	I'd like to tell you a short story with a humorous ending
It doesn't make any sense to fire a bullet into someone just to make sure they're not alive	I believe my companion is not alive
slapstick is humorous because we know that the person is okay, but it looks like they are in danger.	One example is somebody colliding with a street lamp because they are not paying attention
To summarize, the problem with the incongruity theory is that it is too basic.	If you have a place that is all sand and no water, you wouldn't expect to see a ship there.
You think that you will see high quality paintings at an art show.	In other words, because it doesn't make any sense, we find it funny to put the two things together.

answers

I have a joke for you	I'd like to tell you a short story with a humorous ending
I think my friend is dead	I believe my companion is not alive
Take the person who isn't looking and walks into a streetlight.	One example is somebody colliding with a street lamp because they are not paying attention.
A boat in the middle of the desert is incongruous.	If you have a place that is all sand and no water, you wouldn't expect to see a ship there.
To put it another way, the connection is humorous because it's ridiculous.	In other words, because it doesn't make any sense, we find it funny to put the two things together.
When you go to an art gallery, for example, you expect to see real art.	You think that you will see high quality paintings at an art show.
In short, incongruity theory just seems too simple.	To summarize, the problem with the incongruity theory is that it is too basic.
So, slapstick humor is funny because someone's safety seems to be threatened, but we know that actually they are OK.	slapstick is humorous because we know that the person is okay, but it looks like they are in danger.
It's ridiculous to shoot someone just to prove that they're dead.	It doesn't make any sense to fire a bullet into someone just to make sure they're not alive
In conclusion, these are the four main theories of humor that seek to explain why we find something funny.	To sum up, we have studied four possible explanations of why humor exists