BACKGROUND

Closing the month of March like a lion, Seth and Vanessa welcomed a kicking and screaming baby into the world. The entire pregnancy had been quite a surprise for the first-time father, needless to say, and it turned his bachelor lifestyle completely upside down as he took on the trials of parenthood. Thankfully he didn't go into it blindly and without aid as Vanessa was already a mother of daughter Grace Parker. The then dating parents were enthralled with their newborn and felt he was bringing them even closer together, though Grace had contrasting feelings about the whole ordeal. At first she was keen on the idea of playing with Franklin as if he were one of her dolls, but she soon learned that her step-brother was rather needy and the amount of attention he took from her spotlight was not to her liking.

Franklin proved to be quite a handful as the years went on. Spoiled, loud, and determined to have his way, every moment was time for roughhousing and, arguably his favourite pastime, bothering his step-sister in whatever means he could. His behaviour even drove his private tutor, Barnabus Burke, to the point of resigning and vowing to never step foot inside the household again. There was a noticeable change, however, when Franklin was enrolled at Primary Wizarding School, which caused his high energy level and recklessness to be better balanced due to socialisation with peers his age and various sporting outlets. The addition of two sisters, Harriet and Coraline, to the family further improved matters as he felt the sudden need to be a good big brother and be there to protect his sisters. Regardless of these improvements, that did not prevent him from frequently dipping a toe out of line and being a persistent annoyance to Grace.

Shortly after turning eleven years of age, Franklin joined his eldest sister at Hogwarts. Though determined to be welcomed to Slytherin and not be misplaced like his Hufflepuff father, he was sorted into Gryffindor after four minutes of listening to the Sorting Hat's ramblings. This displeased the boy so much that he refused to sit at his House's table during the feast and tried sneaking into the Slytherin's common room his first night. For much of his first year, he spent little time in his common room and wound up getting up to no good and sitting in detention on a regular basis. Franklin came to accept his House the years that followed; his overly daring nature, stubbornness, and disregard for the rules proved that he was indeed fit for Gryffindor. But other traits soon became prominent when Hadleigh Lynch, a Slytherin in his year, became romantically involved in his life. The two being together had quite a positive influence on him as he became more focused on his studies, successfully completed Animagus training, and wore both Prefect and Head Boy badges before graduating from school.

Following a blissful summer of travel across the world and moving into an apartment together, the school sweethearts both found themselves fully engulfed into the adult world. Franklin in particular pursued his dream career and started three years of Auror training. Day after day, he would return from the Ministry mentally and physically exhausted. Even though he felt this way, he was still delighted to be returning home to Hadleigh, who would effortlessly cheer him up and even help him study for his YATI exams in spite of having to tend to her own university studies and at least a dozen creatures. In the end, this resulted in Franklin earning passing marks on all of his training courses.

Auror promotion, more kids, fighting crime, Third Wizarding War, time in St. Mungo's, Senior Auror promotion.
