Course Description:

This class is primarily for college-bound students who have a good grasp of English fundamentals as ev by high achievement scores and previous English grades. Content includes a general survey of the development of American literature from colonial times to the present. Writing skills are stressed, with an eye to clarity, unity, and the persuasiveness of expression. This course includes a focus on how American Literature is representative of the people who produced it and therefore correlates to the historical development of the country. The literature answers the question, "What is an American?"

In order to receive the Honors distinction, the student must receive a passing grade on the District's Honors American Literature exam in June.
