Reducing the Risk of AI Affecting Assessment

An immediate risk is that students use AI to generate work that is externally assessed, and is plagiarised or is inaccurate. The recommended actions are:

- Cite References Instructing students to cite any sources that they use enables easier checks on the authenticity
- Be clear on procedural expectations: Explaining to students the need for them to produce authentic work, and the risks of submitting work they have not written including work generated by AI, will prevent students breaching guidance from assessment organisations. This could include using plagiarism detection software to check student work for unauthorised use of AI-powered tools.
- Monitoring student progress: Teachers should monitor student progress and be aware of any changes in the way that students are completing their work. This will help to identify any cases where students are using AI-powered tools in an inappropriate way.
- Educating students about AI: Students should be educated about the potential uses and limitations of AI-powered tools. This will help students to understand how these tools can be used to support their learning, but also to avoid plagiarism and other forms of academic misconduct.
- Encourage students to think critically about the work that they produce and be aware of the limitations of AI-powered tools. These tools are not perfect, and they can sometimes generate work that is inaccurate or plagiarised.
