BIOGRAPHY:

Before the site-65:
Born in the year 1982 on November 16, Arthur E. Cooke drew breath. The early years saw him within his older brothers' shadows. All of them were successful in their own right; the eldest of the three was a top-scoring student in his class. His second eldest brother was already destined for a career as an actor. Arthur was gifted in other ways; he loved to draw. In primary school he was constantly praised for his artistic skills when it came to copying things he saw. Sure, his maths and English were just average, but it didn't stop him. During his high school years he met Leah, his future wife, during his art class. She was a wild spirit who loved nothing more than creating conceptual art. Arthur never understood it, but having her talk his ear off about it was music to his ears. He and Leah would soon start a romantic relationship during their final years of high school, culminating in a shared dance at their prom.

Leah's art pieces became a local hit, and she began selling them from the coffee shop she worked at. Arthur, on the other hand, worked his arse off at a local fast food restaurant. He soon got his chance to showcase his talents. He impressed the head office when the boss himself visited. They praised Arthur's work on an easy-to-read menu and funky icons for their posters. Moving from being behind a grill to working in an office, Arthur took marketing classes at this marketing college. At 24, Arthur and Leah moved in together and quickly tied the knot. Nine months later, they welcomed a baby girl into the world. By the time he turned 30, his life had completely changed. Leah and Annie were murdered during a home invasion; when Arthur got home, he was devastated. By the time the police arrived, he could not speak with the officers and was taken in for questioning. Arthur's trial seemed to have been rigged, which landed him in jail; with his phone call he managed to hire a private investigator to look into his case. However, before getting back to Arthur, Mister Cooke was given an orange jumpsuit and was transferred to the D-Block of Site-44.

Life at Site-44:
Having spent 6 months already at Site-44, he would earn a Trustee Rank, participating in some of the site's more mundane tasks, janitorial work during the weekends, and lunchroom activities during the weekdays. Each day felt like an endless slog of the same routine. He knew his life was over. That was until speaking with a member of Ethics during a site visit. While explaining his situation to the ethics member, he mentioned the private investigator and expressed his hope that they could communicate with him to gain more information about the murders of his wife and daughter. Weeks passedIt took weeks for them to extract Arthur from the D-Block and transport him to their offices.Over his case and compare it with the investigator's findings. Seeing as the whole thing was a cover-up for a dangerous gang's wrongdoings, they let Arthur either return to D-Block or join the Foundation. Taking the latter of the options He was Class-Fed and taken to work for ISD at Site-44.

During his tenure at ISD, he adhered to the FLC without question. His approach to apprehending people was less friendly and more cold and judgemental. Due to an overcrowding issue at Site-44, Arthur and a few others transferred over to Site-65. During his time at Site-65 he felt as if his skills were not needed for ISD; after seeing advertisements for Floor-3 Assistants, he would immediately apply. Once they got back and they spoke to him face-to-face, he proved to be one of the more competent applicants at that time. Arthur set out to do his best for the council after they shook hands and recruited him.

Time as an Overseer’s Assistant:

It was only the first month of his work when Arthur looked into the case of strange figures on the moon. Luckily for him, the resident spaceman had arrived at the site. However, before he could question the spaceman about those creatures, Arthur had to focus on an odd book for his work. He didn't know how it worked, but all he knew was that it was important to the man in a purple hat. He'd thought he could use that book to get Research around Floor 3's fingers; however, instead of having that effect, the book itself drove him insane. Distancing himself from the book, he would leave it for the next person who finds it. However, the voices continued to drive him insane. Over the next few months, he attempted to continue his work but was granted an extended period to recalibrate his thoughts and regain his sanity.

Sabbatical and a potential Return to work:
During his time at the offices, he familiarised himself with the work life he once had, while his mind slowly repaired itself from the damage caused by the book. He may not have been doing any of the big orders, but what he was doing was beneficial for the site. He was sending up boxes of much-needed items for Floor 3 and other areas. 2 weeks prior to this, he gets a letter addressed to him. His sabbatical was up, and he'd be requesting an interview to see if he was eligible to work again. Reminded of the good times he had on the floor, he would take the chance and head back towards Site-65 with a burning fire in his heart.
