

November 28, 2011

Hello!

I hope everyone had a fabulous Thanksgiving holiday. I know I sure did – except my turkey did not exactly come off as planned! Doesn't something always have to go wrong? 🦃

Anyway, I am refreshed and ready to face the stretch until Christmas. It is so hard to believe that we are this far along. We will be wrapping up our study of Egypt this week with a Tutankhamen project. I am sending home the review sheet for the test that will be on Friday. Also, we are studying the circulatory system in our body as well as beginning the study of our nervous system.

In math, we will begin our in depth study of numbers to 20. I would like to know from the parents if you feel comfortable teaching using our methods of number bonds and using the language of number bonds?

If not, I would be happy to conduct an afterschool session on working with numbers bonds and the language we should be using with the children to make it easier for them. If you would be interested in such a session – please indicate below by circling below and returning this sheet:

Yes      No

If at least 4 parents are interested, I will schedule a 30 minute session for this.

Have a wonderful week!

Love,

Mrs. Way