Abstract

Replace this text with the text of your abstract. The abstract must be double-spaced.

There is no word limit for the abstract. To help people find your research, please make sure that the abstract contains a summary of all the key components of your work: the problem statement, the purpose of the research, the methodology, the results, and the analysis or implications of the research.

Dedication

A dedication is usually a personal statement of gratitude to a friend, family member, or mentor who was not part of the official committee or a sponsor of the research. The dedication must be double spaced. The dedication is optional. If you don't want to have a dedication section, delete this paragraph and the heading above it.

Acknowledgements

The acknowledgements section is usually where you thank people who helped you with the research, including committee members and chair; professionals who donated time, expertise, equipment, or research facilities; and people or organizations that provided funding or support for the research. The acknowledgements section, if you have one, must be double spaced. The acknowledgements section is optional. If you don't need to have an acknowledgements section, delete this paragraph and the heading above it.

If you do not have anyone you wish to acknowledge or dedicate your manuscript to, you may delete this entire page.

Protocol or IRB Approval Statement

If your research involved human subjects, animals, or biohazardous materials, you must place your approval letter here. Delete the text on this page and insert a legible screenshot of the approval letter. Or, if you prefer, you can use Adobe Acrobat to insert the protocol approval letter here after you save your manuscript as a PDF. If you insert the letter into the PDF, be sure to remove this page from your manuscript before uploading it to ProQuest.

List of Figures

The list of figures is required if you have any photos, illustrations, or charts in your manuscript. Each figure in the list must have a number, a caption, and the page number on which it appears. You can auto-generate your list of figures by 1) using the Insert Caption button on the Reference ribbon in Word to create all your figure captions in the manuscript and 2) then using the Insert Table of Figures button to insert the list onto this page. You can then update the table as needed.

If you have no photos, illustrations, or charts in your manuscript, please delete this page.

Tables get their own list; see next page if you have tables in your manuscript.

List of Tables

The list of tables is required if you present any numerical or textual information as tables in your manuscript, even if there is only one table. Each table in the list must have a number, a caption, and the page number on which it appears.

If you didn't have a list of figures, you can auto-generate the list of tables using the list of figures instructions. However, if you have both figures and tables, the list of tables will have to be typed manually. You may need to make an appointment with a UA Little Rock thesis editor to get help with this part of the formatting if you don't know how to create a manual list of tables.

Delete this page if not applicable to your manuscript.

List of Symbols, Abbreviations, and Nomenclature

This list is required if you include any symbols, abbreviations, or specialized vocabulary terms (nomenclature) in your manuscript that are not explained in the text of your chapters. Include each symbol, abbreviation, or vocabulary terms along with a short definition of each. This page must be double spaced.

Delete this page if not applicable to your manuscript.

Preface

Replace this text with the text of your preface. The preface is an introduction to your manuscript that describes where portions of your manuscript have previously been published. It must state that you are the first author of your research and give full citations for those publications. It must be included before the body of your manuscript. The publications must also be included in the references section of your manuscript.

For each previously published chapter, include the following statement in the preface:

Chapter 1 consists of materials previously published in the journal (insert the journal name, with the permission of the journal; include the citation of the journal where your work appears). The body of the preface must be double-spaced.

Delete this page if not applicable to your manuscript.

This template uses the Styles found on the Home ribbon in Microsoft Word to control the formatting of your body text and headers. It's important that you mark your headings with the correct style in Word as you add them. If you don't mark your headings correctly, you won't be able to autogenerate or auto-update your table of contents. If you want to choose different fonts, different levels of bold or italics, or different colors for your headings and body text, right-click the relevant style in the Styles section of the Home ribbon, and then modify the style. All your text should automatically change when you apply the new style.
