HEADLINE: There Exist 2 Options for Those Who Let Down Their Team. (PAS)

Many people have a high sense of responsibility, but working in a team is tough for them.

There were probably many situations, where you were afraid to talk with others and ask questions, then “what if....?” thoughts killing you, which is why you struggle to meet deadlines.

Other people in your group will perceive you as a dummy, and your team leader will not trust you with crucial work.

If you continue to mess up, you will drag your team down, and eventually, you will exhaust your team leader so that he will kick you out.

This was the first option.

The second one is:

The only way to avoid all these headaches is to “practice” first.

And this “practice” is not a training course, not a psychology session, but actual teamwork with real people that will allow you to develop communication skills and boost your ability to cooperate more effectively as a group member and finish the tasks much faster.
