From The Wonders of the Invisible World By Cotton Mather

The trial of Martha Carrier at the Court of Oyer and Terminer, held by Adjournment at Salem, August 2, 1692

I. Martha Carrier was indicted for the bewitching of certain persons, according to the form usual in such cases, pleading not guilty to her indictment. There were first brought in a considerable number of the bewitched persons who not only made the court sensible of an horrid witchcraft committed upon them, but also deposed that it was Martha Carrier, or her shape, that grievously tormented them by biting, pricking, pinching and chocking them. It was further deposed that while this Carrier was on her examination before the magistrates, the poor people were so tortured that everyone expected their death upon the very spot but that upon the binding of Carrier they were eased. Moreover the look of Carrier then laid the afflicted people for dead; which things were also now seen upon her trial. And it was testified that upon the mention of some having their necks twisted round, by the shape of this Carrier, she replied, “It’s no matter though their necks had been twisted quite off.”

II. Before the trial of this prisoner several of her own children had frankly and fully confessed not only that they were witches themselves, but that this, their mother, had made them so. This confession they made with great shows of repentance and with much demonstration of truth.

V. One Foster, who confessed her own share in the witchcraft for which the prisoner stood indicted, affirmed that she had seen the prisoner at some of their witch meetings, and that it was this Carrier who persuaded her to be a witch. She confessed that the devil carried them on a pole to a witch meeting, but the pole broke, and she was hanging about Carrier’s neck, they both fell down, and she then received an hurt by the fall, whereof she was not at this very time recovered.

VI. One Lacy, who likewise confessed her share in this witchcraft, now testified that she and the prisoner were once bodily present at a witch meeting in Salem village and that she knew the prisoner to be a witch and to have been at a diabolical sacrament, and that the prisoner was the undoing of her and her children by enticing them into the snare of the devil.

Witch Hunts Today

It is not only the Court at Salem that judged witchcraft cases; throughout Europe, a high number of women were burned as witches during the Great Hunt, one of the harshest periods of punishment in European history.

Just like in Europe and any other parts of the world, witch-hunting in Africa is closely tied to superstitions and the socio-economic background, even personal jealousy. The favouring factors are poorly educated villagers, traditional healers and clairvoyants: witches claim to have supernatural powers. Moreover, plights like hunger, poverty, unemployment breed jealousies that grow easily into anger and vengeance. The villagers always blame fate and black magic for undesirable events. Witch hunts still claim many lives throughout the world, especially in Africa. Many times their own families accuse them of witchcraft, and expel them. Not only women are accused of witchcraft, but men also. The physical attributes they are given are greyish skin, red eyes, some physical disablement; traveling about upside down, bad temper, secrecy, jealousy are most frequently presented as main moral attributes; they are accused of practicing incest and cannibalism.

The new trend followed by the witches is to build their own website, advertising their powers and capabilities, to attract clients; they charge for their services and there is intense competition among them. Who would think of burning them on pyre nowadays?
