

Dear (Name of the person),

It is the worst feeling to see your spouse admitted to the hospital. From the day you are admitted, I had flashes of all the beautiful years we have had spent together. The tears always rolled up from my eyes when I see you on the hospital bed from the window.

I had tried my best to save your life and do whatever it can take to make this surgery successful. I can not explain to you the level of my happiness when I got to know about the success of this surgery.

The day of the surgery was the longest day of my life. Every minute I was praying for your well-being. I can not see you lying on this bed anymore.

I hope once you will open your eyes, then you will feel fine. I will soon take you home and that is my promise to you. It is enough of living without you. The home is no more like home without you.

Everywhere I can feel your presence. My days and nights are empty from the day you got admitted. I hope that you will recover soon to fill my emptiness.

My prayers will never let me feel down and I know that from now each day you will spend towards your recovery. I have completely realized that you are my everything and I can not be going to think a moment without you. Hoping for your speedy recovery my love.

Regards,

XYZ