DESCRIPTION

Lazy // Mischievous // Manipulative // Irreverent

Laidback // Clever // Intuitive // Playful

Whether you love to hate him or hate to love him, it doesn't matter to Caesar as long as you can show him a good time! On the surface he seems like a laid back all around decent dude. Things seem to hardly ever get to him, and he costs through life with an it is what it is mindset. One may even call him pleasant upon first meeting him.

While having a creative mind, being a fast thinker, and bountiful insight to read situations quickly he tends to use these skills of his to everyone's detriment. He cleverly finds ways to avoid work, gets a fast read on people to find the quickest way to push their buttons, all the while being quite the sweet talker to get himself out of trouble.

Caesar had a pretty cushy upbringing. His parents were deeply entrenched in the entertainment industry, his mother an agent and his father a producer, the two's high pressure work lives always putting them at the brink of divorce. Though even with tensions high between them they made up for any marital outbursts with material goods, ensuring that at the very least their children were at least pampered and well taken care of. He was pretty much set for life! High living and well connected parents that could get him any job he wanted after graduation no matter how mediocre his academic performance was.

Caesar being the first born son had a certain amount of expectations placed on him. To his mother he was her darling sweet boy, he could do no wrong, the face and temperament of an angel. He was her beloved first son after all. To his father, he was irresponsible, aimless and in desperate need of some discipline. He was the eldest after all! With his parents' efforts so heavily focused on him, his far more headstrong and driven sister Isabella often faded into the background. She was loved but her achievements often went unacknowledged. Aside from the typical dysfunctions of your standard family, they got along well enough at the end of the day.

[LOCKED LORE] In his senior year of high school. Caesar lost his sister to an incident involving an angel while exploring an abandoned building that once stored old electronics. While Caesar had witnessed a highly anomalous event the incident was passed off by authorities as a disappearance, an unfortunate act of negligence. Every time Caesar tried to question the true nature of the event, his speculation was shut down and written off as hysteria caused by witnessing a traumatic event.

The loss of Isabella was a hard blow for the Costello family. Caesar's mother suffered a psychological break rendering her unable to work. Caesar's father buried himself in his own work shortly after to avoid being at home.

As Caesar entered college, he just tried to forget the whole thing, burying his grief by indulging in the partying and drinking that came with university living. His grades and attendance suffered, dropping out in the middle of his program.

Whatever. It's not like it mattered. There was plenty of cash to go around with dad up in his concrete tower.

Caesar would have been perfectly fine coasting through life on his family's fortune. However, his father seeing him become so unmotivated and without purpose, felt as though he needed to step in. Caesar was cut off and if he wanted access to the family's money, he needed to prove he could hold down a decent job on his own.

After a half hearted attempt to apply to a single job, he seemed to have struck it lucky applying for Powell General Electric. No prior experience needed? Low barrier to entry? Heh, and the old man said this would be hard. He was happy to take on any bottom of the ladder job and slip by and get back home to his breezy little life.

Still, this seemed like a total drag. Here's to hoping he'll find some rich hot corporate bigshot who wants to take him home and make him a trophy husband.
