

Snowfall

Neva Janssen (born Neva Pérez, in 1992) remembers little of the first five years of her life, spent in Barcelona. She remembers her mother crying almost all the time, and she remembers a few terribly frightening moments spent in the presence of the man who fathered her. Then one day he was gone, and she and her mother left their barrio, the city, and Spain all together. Somehow, they made their way all the way to the Netherlands, where her mother met the next man she would marry, who had a daughter from his previous marriage. Neva was unsure what to make of Kirsten Janssen, but she soon came to love her as a sister.

Some superpowers develop their abilities in stages. From the time that she was born, Neva was largely unaware of hot or low temperatures; neither the most boiling summer day nor the most frigid winter night bothered her in the least. Kirsten was the first person to recognize what this might mean, and she encouraged her little sister to keep it a secret and bundle up in winter all the same. Mystified, Neva went along with this. It might have been better if she had not.

The second stage came on when she was fourteen, and she started generating ice sculptures in the middle of July. Unfortunately, this happened while she was at school, and during the height of a period of global anti-super rhetoric (sponsored by Billie Zane as part of the lead-up to her first attempt at world conquest.) Called a freak, a monster and much worse names, Neva promptly ran away from home. She spent the next four years hiding out in the Zoom-Kalmhoutse Heide national park, occasionally straying over onto the Belgian side.

In 2010, Kirsten finally tracked her down, and all but begged Neva to return to civilization and their family. (Her parents are both still alive. What, you thought they might have died at sea? Come on.) She hesitantly did so and found a much more accepting milieu when she did. She started to use her powers to help people in her neighborhood, and eventually became a well-regarded hero throughout Amsterdam. Then it happened that Basilea visited the city, and she and Neva found themselves teamed up against Nocticula. Impressed by the power and control demonstrated by this young woman, Basilea arranged her invitation to the Powerhouse, becoming its newest member.

Since 2013, Snowfall (or Sneeuwval) has seen her worldwide popularity explode as the result of a certain movie. She is not convinced of the argument made by Blakestone: that the two of them, and the other members of the Ultra Girls, are tapping into a stream of the collective unconsciousness inspired by that movie and those like it, but she willingly lends her power to the efforts of the group all the same, and admits to feeling a camaraderie with them that is greater than what she feels with most of the Powerhouse, or even with her sister.

While she had a brief relationship with Nereus, she doubts that they will ever really get back together. (Havfrue is much more his type, anyway.) On a recent trip to Morocco, she encountered the entity known as the Green Inferno, and found herself bewilderingly fascinated by him. (Her? Them? The gender identity of the Inferno is not clear.) Despite the danger that the other elemental presents, she feels drawn towards them nonetheless ...

Update 2021: Snowfall voluntarily stepped down as co-leader of the Ultra Girls, but chose to remain as a member of the team. Her relationship with the Green Inferno recently became an intimate one, in ways that she finds it both difficult and embarrassing to describe. She has also learned the nature of what the Inferno is guarding, and has shared that information with Blakestone. Neva has also recently learned that she may have another sister.

Update 2022: In addition to her heartbreak over the dissolution of the Ultra Girls, Neva has suffered another serious trauma. After learning of her relationship with the Green Inferno, Kirsten has abruptly broken off all contact with her as well as the rest of the family. This is both bewildering and hurtful. Her attempts to form some positive relationship with Icepick have also gotten her nowhere. She sometimes finds herself humming a few bars of highly copyrighted music, recently. Fortunately the break-up of the team turned out to be temporary, but the way that it all shook out convinced her that she could not continue to divide herself between two different teams. So she has become the third member of the Powerhouse to resign from the team.
