Q2 Homework Calendar

Welcome back! Dates listed on the following table are the dates work is assigned. (E.g. the assignment next to October 14 is to be completed ON October 14.) All assignments are due the following class period unless otherwise indicated. This calendar will remain the same regardless of block scheduling; on block days, we will simply cover two days of homework in one period, and both days of work will be due when we meet. If you are absent, this calendar will make it possible for you to plan ahead and keep up. Students are expected to keep up with this reading schedule no matter what.

Homework is graded on the honor system. You will be checking off on a clipboard, indicating that you finished the reading from the night before and are prepared for class. If that isn't true, you will mark an open circle. If you catch up later, you can fill in that circle with a check at that time.

Being prepared for class means that you read every word with your eyeballs, you understand what happened, and you can find important passages when you need them. You are welcome to use outside resources to help you achieve this. Some students like to read a summary online before they start reading so they know what to expect. Some students like to listen to an audiobook while they read with their eyeballs to help them understand it. Some students like to annotate with color-coded highlighters; some like to underline and draw symbols; some like to write little summaries in the margins to help them track the plot. As long as you read the whole passage, you understand what happened in the story, and you can find helpful passages in class when you need them, you're good to go.
