Become a real leader using these 6 simple steps!

Most leaders have little to no clue how to lead their team. They assume having a 'boss' attitude and being the loudest in the room is enough to earn the loyalty of the team members. This probably has served them well in the past, either in high school or when going out with friends.

Not knowing that people who follow them, actually are more intimidated by them than they are loyal. That's also the case in the workplace. They go about their day, delegating most of the work to others and taking credit for it.

When a team member comes to them for help, they genuinely want to help but don't know how, resulting in bad advice. This will lower their status among their team members without them knowing. Fast forward a couple months or years and you'll see how tension rises among team members. People will feel insecure and their performance will decrease. Their leader's reputation is at stake. He has to take action to avoid any escalation of circumstances. But isn't it too late by now?

Do you want to let it come this far? I'm guessing you don't.

Fortunately, there is a successful way to become a real leader and it consists of 6 steps. The first one is training your team members. This will allow your team members to rise above themselves, which will guarantee a higher performance of each individual. However, a trained group of people is not a team yet and it doesn't make you a real leader yet.
