

Writing Support Fall 2024

We heard from some folks about their desire for writing support this semester so we are offering this experimental program. Our goal with this is to help group people up into ad-hoc writing teams that will meet regularly through the fall semester, and provide as much structured support for the groups as they would like.

This is not really an application, we will take anyone who is interested, but we are asking folks to complete the sign-up by 9/3 at 11:59pm so we can match people up ASAP.

Who is running this thing: Chris Fosen (ENGL) is helping to organize this with support from Zach. How involved Chris is depends on your needs: he's willing to meet regularly with your group, share ideas and resources, and facilitate discussion—or not do any of that, perhaps just checking in every once in a while to see how things are going. People have mentioned they like the Shut Up and Write model we've offered in the past and that's definitely an option here.

Why should I sign up: This program is a good fit for you if you have a writing project you are working on but need a system of peer support and dedicated time to get on track.

How rich am I going to get by participating: ~~so rich!~~ This is an unfunded program. We are experimenting with an alternative format to try and support faculty in a different way. We will be assessing this model to figure out how viable it is moving forward.

When are the meetings: We will figure that out when we get feedback from you. We will do our best to build networks that work for everyone.

Any other perks: FDEV will host an end of the semester get together for those who participated in the project to have some coffee/tea, a snack, and share some of what they've been working on. As a group we'll talk about how it went and what might be improved next time.

Say less, I'm ready to sign up now!