So for me, one of my favorites is the AVID eBinder. I've been using the Google Slides template that was pitched to me from former AVID teachers that have like inherited the program at the school. And what I really like is throwing our bell work in there. So, we figured out a way of creating a master copy of the eBinder, a student copy, and then in forcing the copy for the students to create their copy from, I can post the bell work in the slides, click "Update." It automatically prompts for all the kids to update. It gets us going with bell work very quickly in the day. And then the overall customization of the eBinder in general where they get to express themselves, throw in GIFs, and different images, and things like that. It teaches them how to use Google Slides in a different way than just receiving information. And so, I'm really excited for the ways that I was shown how to use the new eBinder templates this year to get students to organize things on their own and not just be input from the teachers, but they can express themselves as well.
