ROME

Imagine an empire so vast and yet powerful, but then it falls like rain. Also imagine the same empire that controls parts of Africa and Europe. One may envision such an empire that is war-like. This empire is known as the Roman Empire. Aside all of the conquests and battles, their art and architecture are of extreme significance. Throughout past decades, archaeologists have stumbled across many remarkable findings that give historians a much needed in-depth look into ancient societies. Spas, glass technology, law, astronomy, silk, and other "inventions" have been discovered frequently as archaeologists discover and unlock secrets of the past. Therefore, more interest has been in the findings of cultural values. ... show more content.

There have been ruins of an ancient Roman city located in Egypt. The ruins of a city belonging to the Roman Empire built more than approximately seventeen centuries ago have been found near Dahshut oasis in Egypt's Western Desert. After four years of excavations, an Egyptian Canadian team recently uncovered ruins of the city, which is made of terra cotta. The find includes a temple with the same name carved in one wall. Dahshut, 340 miles south of Cairo, was a major Egyptian agricultural area during the Roman occupation of Egypt from 30 BCE to 395 CE. (Guardian, section 1, page 24, sat 7 3/5/18)

Speaking of Rome, a fresco first opens a window to the past, which is an amazing discovery. During Nero's reign, two-thirds of Rome burned. There are no pictorial accounts of the Neroan period, except the fresco. Fresco is the art of painting on fresh plaster with pigments dissolved in water. The fresco gives one a bird's eye view of a contemporary city, possibly Rome, and provides a unique insight into urban life at the time of the Emperor Nero. Archaeologists stumbled on the find at the end of a tunnel running under the Colosseum, a public park opposite the Colosseum, which is frequented by drug addicts and prostitutes. Mr. Silvestro Cambrini, an archaeologist, saw numerous items depicted in the painting of a fortified imperial city correspond to the topography of ancient Rome. The fresco, measuring seven feet by nine feet, could give an exceptional visual. ...
