Backstory:

- Born and raised in a raen settlement in Hingashi, in the area surrounding the vast Ragau estate
- The Kobori clan was a small one with little history, or what history there was had been long lost. Her family never had much money, her parents worked as manual laborers for wealthier clans
- Her mother died when she was 6 to an illness that went untreated, so from then on her dad looked after Kiri and her young sibling on his own
- Kiri always wanted to work to help her dad support their family, but he would never let her because he wanted her to be able to have a childhood - she was dissatisfied about how he refused to let her help him and tried to take care of any of the domestic work that she could, but he still wouldn't let her do much of that
- Taking on the whole burden of providing for and caring for Kiri and Shuka on his own took an obvious toll on him physically and mentally, and much as she knew he wouldn't want her to, Kiri always felt like a burden her father would be better off without
- It wasn't long after the loss of her mother that she happened to meet a scruffy little child by the side of the river where she went to wash her clothes. Noha had slipped away from her attendants to play by herself, and was quick to have Kiri play with her too. The two became fast friends, and this would become the first of many such playdates between the two of them
- Kiri and Noha came from different worlds, but for whatever reason, they just got along. They ended up each other's closest friends, and Kiri thought Noha was the coolest ever and felt that Noha inspired her to become braver. But she didn't really know what she wanted to be brave enough to do
- They talked often about the idea of leaving home together just as a silly little dream. Noha liked the idea of running away from home and making a life as an adventurer, and maybe meeting her long lost brother on the road. Kiri liked the idea of travelling and seeing all the beautiful sights of the world, and being able to make money as an adventurer that she could send back home, without being another mouth for her family to feed. It was fun to think about, and Kiri would go to sleep dreaming of it many nights, but not something she ever thought was possible

- Needless to say, the day came that Noha confessed to her that she wanted to execute her big escape for real. She knew that it was different to idly talk about it and to really go, so she was ready for Kiri to tell her she wanted to stay after all. It was all a big shock to Kiri, but she knew that what she wanted was to go with Noha, and told her as much
- She talked to her father about her plans because she didn't want to leave without a word. He was against it, but he couldn't fight for long against her uncharacteristic determination
- And so she and Noha left one morning on a journey to find Noha's brother. They did what they could to follow the tracks he left behind, asking about him every step of the way, and managed to follow him to Eorzea. They got the impression that while he was there he ended up a Kind Of Big Deal
- Kiri is really just along for the ride in all this. She barely knew Kish really. Mostly she just wants to see the world, and be with Noha on the way

Character:

- She's a sweet girl!!
- Very gentle and compassionate and selfless, cares a lot about other people and how best she can help them - this is why she wanted to become a healer rather than a fighter
- Not good at prioritising herself though, she struggles to really identify what she wants herself let alone ask for it. She's much more likely to just go along with what's asked of her or what the people she cares about want from her
- She kind of thinks that deep down she's a dull person because of this :(
- When she does have things that she selfishly wants she can't help but feel like they're ugly feelings and she has difficulty voicing them
- To others she comes across as quiet, but obviously kind and easy to be around
- She's a little more cheerful and excitable when she's with Noha. Noha makes her happy
- Takes pleasure in the simple things, loves nature and the outdoors. She gets very excited when she finds flowers and small animals that she's never seen before, so being on an adventure in an unfamiliar place is a magical experience for her
- When she's Content and At Peace she often sings or hums to herself... she has a nice soothing voice. If someone points out to her that she's doing it she gets embarrassed though
- She's physically stronger than she looks lol she could lift someone her own size at least with no issue
