

GREAT POINTS & GOOD QUESTIONS

Add points and questions under your topic -- can do it anonymously if you like!

You'll have 10 minutes to do this.

|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| Analogies with racism and slavery Clare, Lexxi, Maxwell Slavery vs. animal subjugation, racism vs. speciesism                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                    |
| Factory farming, humane farming, least harm, eating dogs Belleza Mitchell Lizeth Loza Tyson Cognitive development in animals/diff species Do you need to choose one side or the other when it comes to eating meat? Can there be some good way that's in the middle? Cultural differences with having different animals as pets and what is ok vs not ok to eat Just because you can eat meat, should you when there are so many other options                                                                                |
| Clams, oysters, insects Sentience and sapience Pain, precautionary principle Does sentience, sapience, and pain matter for moral standing of animals Do these animals have moral standing? Is it permissible to do X,Y, Z to these animals Should we abide by the precautionary principle?                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| Higher animals, dolphins, orcas Mikkel (orcas) Betsy (dolphins in captivity) Super intelligent animals don't do well in captivity Episodic memory Mirror testing Breeding in captivity: ethical complication Difference in Abilities? (fin flopping over) How animals could have more protection to be able to sue Gruen: comparing animals to humans in captivity Inviolable rights                                                                                                                     |
| Human priority, animal laws, breaking laws, pets, hunting Izzy (breaking laws) Ashton (Hunting) Matt (Human priority) Teddy (Human Priority) Overlap about lexical priority and the cruelty which is permitted within factory farming. Animal welfare vs. animal rights How is lexical priority relevant to legal protections of cases (like factory farming) where cruelty may be tolerated? By how much should animal interests be discounted, if at all? Are current laws sufficient for protecting animals? |
|                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       |