Personality

Nautilus doesn't focus much on himself. He is incredibly sweet and loving, and gets very attached to other cats rather quickly. He always thinks of others first, and will do anything for them, even if it means degrading himself for their benefit. When it comes to himself however, Naut doesn't really think he's worth much. Everyone else is way better! He isn't confident in himself at all, and rarely voices his own opinions; rather, he copies whatever everyone else says or does. He won't often stand up for himself, but if any cat says a bad word about one of his loved ones, they're a goner. He's always quick to return compliments with a "no, you!" and can never take a gift without giving one back. He loves helping others, even if they don't want the help.

Nautilus doesn't like acknowledging his skills, but he knows other cats appreciate his aptitude at hunting and gathering, and likes helping teach others those skills. When it comes to rules, Naut is hesitant to break even the smallest one, and tries to remind his friends of them often. He's pretty chill and relaxed.

History

Beginnings

Nautilus was born the youngest in a litter of four, his littermates being Penny, Olearia, and Cappuccino (or Kip). He had an older adoptive sister named Reed, too! Nautilus and his siblings were the result of a surrogate pregnancy, as their “adoptive” mother Chestnut was unable to conceive. While their biological mom had gone on her way once she wasn’t needed, their dad Willow stuck around, albeit in a “family friend that babysits” kind of way. Nautilus thought once in a while why their bio mom had just left and why their dad wasn’t their dad, but other than that, it didn’t bother him too much—in fact, he rather forgot there was any ever mother but Chestnut for him.
