Summary:

Modern product teams leverage their roadmaps as a strategic communication tool. Successful product teams arm internal teams with more visibility into their priorities and the reasoning behind them. This leads to greater understanding, alignment, and buy-in.

UserVoice internal roadmaps will enable product teams to:

- Reduce recurring time spent meeting with internal teams to disseminate information
- Increase alignment and buy-in by linking supporting customer ideas to features
- Pull forward risk associated with not getting internal team feedback on the roadmap

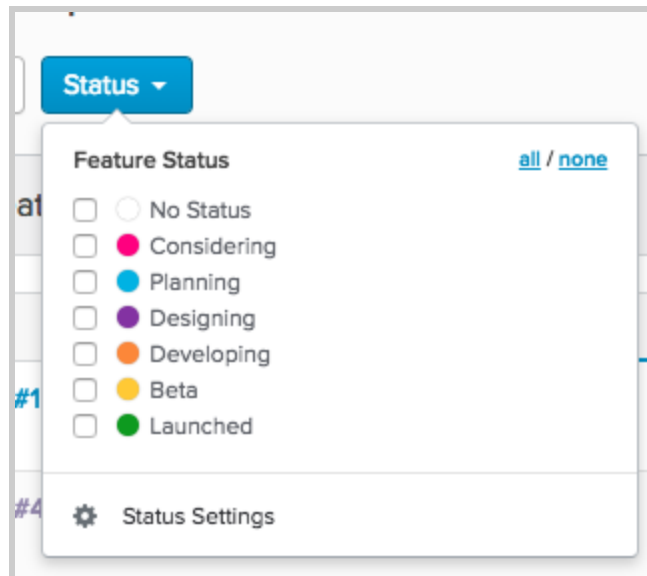

UserVoice Admin Experience

We've renamed the core "Feature" navigation to "Roadmap". Your existing features will live within this view. In addition the the feature list, we've introduced a new board view for organizing your features.

View Features with the Board View, or using the existing List and Chart views.

Each feature will continue to use the existing statuses. These statuses will be represented as columns. Any features marked with “No Status” will not be visible on the internal roadmap. Consider this your feature holding area.

Filter by Feature Status

By default, the internal roadmap will be visible by admins only. When you are ready to share your internal roadmap you'll be able to do so with contributors and or all employees on a specific email domain:

1. Admins Only – only licensed admins can access
2. Contributors – admins and licensed contributors can access
3. Authorized Email Domains – admins, contributors, and specified domains (e.g. everyone @company.com). You can specify as many domains as you'd like. Users with verified email addresses from those domains will be able to create a UserVoice account that will permit them to view the internal roadmap. No external customers will have access.

Authorized Users and Contributor Experience

To access the internal roadmap, existing contributors will be able to use their UserVoice sign-in credentials to gain access.

Internal users with an approved email domain will be walked through a simple email confirmation and account creation process to gain access to the roadmap.

To prevent outside access, internal team members must verify their email address

Acme Internal Roadmap

Once verified and authenticated, your internal team will see your roadmap!
