Question: 98% of police officers are found not guilty when in court for killing an African American. Why do you think this percentage is so high?

Answer: I honestly think that, they just don't value black lives. And I think that black children are considered a threat from the age of 12 and they try to suppress these situations by making court trials so short. They try to keep the image for white police officers positive.

Question: As a follow-up, what could the government do to lower this percentage?

Answer: A jury of peers at this point is a myth, I don't think often times, when there's a person of color, the person is never represented by their race, and is often whitewashed. The juries at the Supreme Court should be more balanced, and often times is never in favor of the plaintiff.

Question: Do you think the news and other media outlets tell the full story?

Answer: I don't think the news, tell the entire story because I don't believe their constructed that way. They are constructed now to show the most provocative parts, and not the entire story.

Question: If so, what program do you trust the most?

Answer: MSNBC

Question: On a scale of 1-10, how relevant do you think this movement is as of 2017?

Answer: 2, maybe.

Question: Do you think this movement has helped make progress in today's society?

Answer: No, No progress, no change. And it's not really just the Movement, but us blacks as a whole. The African American community, only seems to galvanize when a huge situation occurs, but never seem to be consistent. We talk about it for maybe 2-3 days before moving on to something else.
