

I already know how it feels to have everything put out into the open, you know.

Every last second of it, nearly every private conversation, every intimate moment, every tear shed and every bit of blood...

...all of Titania got to see it.

That's just how it goes.

The ceremonies' primary purpose is to serve as a warning. You don't want to end up like those awful Transgressors, the ones that do all those crimes and end up having to pay for them through brutality.

To be honest, though, I think that idea's been getting lost on a lot of people nowadays.

It's turning itself into entertainment, plain and simple. The kind that people don't have to feel bad about, despite all the blood and the gore and the torture and the dying.

Because everyone on screen deserves it.

Because they did wrong.

Because they're bad people, right? They're Transgressors.

They got what was coming to them, this is just justice.

...

Was I even a person to them?

...

Either way, I guess I have experience with having my life exposed like this.

Doesn't mean I don't hate that kind of shit, still.

