Not all of the fans are Ahli or Zamalek, there are fans of other clubs, which made glory before disappearing into the shadows of the second division, with the increased injection of money into football since the beginning of the third millennium.

The fiftieth, "Ayman al-Sayah", from Alexandria, only encouraged the Olympic Club throughout his life: "I grew up on the club's championships when it was competing with Al-Ahly and Zamalek," but he has not seen him again in the Premier League since 2009, coinciding with the gradual increase in the participation of corporate clubs versus Reducing the participation of public clubs.

The 1999/2000 season was the last season that witnessed a majority of mass clubs, with the participation of 8 clubs, compared to 6 for companies and organizations, to drop mass clubs that did not see the lights again, and some of them ascended to the Premier League after 17 years.

The increase in the number of corporate clubs and bodies began in the last two decades, specifically since the Egyptian League season of 2000, the first season in which corporate clubs are more than public clubs, by 8 to 6, respectively.

The total market value of companies and organizations' clubs amounts to 74.2 million euros, according to the Transfer Market website, led by Pyramids Club, with a value of 19.3 million euros, – the second largest marketing value, behind Al-Ahly Club – which enabled it to occupy the third place in the last three seasons, and to compete for the Confederation title over African level.

"Future", who plays in the Premier League for the first time, comes in second place for corporate clubs, with a value of 8.2 million euros, after buying it from the Future Company, which is affiliated with the Future of the Nation party, with a value of 80 million pounds.

And at the bottom of the Houdi Club - Egypt for the clearing of the former - the marketing list with a value of 1.5 million euros.

The total market value of the mass clubs is 72.8 million euros, topped by Al-Ahly club with 29.18 million euros, and the Alexandrian Federation with 5.1 million euros.

Ayman Al-Sayah does not get tired of encouraging the Olympic Club in the second division, but he does not expect his club to rise in the near future, in light of the fact that companies and organizations are at the fore in the schedule of the second division competitions and qualifiers for the Premier League.

It is expected that the share of corporate clubs will increase in view of the second division competitions, where Haras El Hodoud, Porto Suez, Al Dakhiliya and Al Aluminium clubs were at the top of the standings, behind the clubs that moved up this season.
