

Citation practice

1. If you have an article and/or a web page for your topic, create a reference list entry for and we can check it together. If you don't have an article and a web page yet for your topic, then use one of these links as APA practice.
2. Enter your references below each heading. You will see your classmates' references as well:

APA reference for an article from a library database (see examples p. 5 & 6):

- If you already have an article for your topic, use that. If not, try creating a reference list entry for this article: Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome: An Analysis of the Current Treatment Options

Song, B., Yeh, P., Nguyen, D., Ikpeama, U., Epstein, M., & Harrell, J. (2020). Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome: An analysis of the current treatment options. Pain Physician, 23(4), 429–438.
<https://doi.org/10.36076/ppj.2020/23/429>

APA reference for a page from a website (see examples p. 10-11):

- If you have a web page from your own topic, try that. If not, try creating a reference list entry for this web page: Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome (Medline plus)

U.S. National Library of Medicine. (n.d.). Ehlers-Danlos syndrome. MedlinePlus. Retrieved January 10, 2025, from <https://medlineplus.gov/genetics/condition/ehlers-danlos-syndrome/>

APA reference for an image. See examples from the VCC APA guide or APA Style Blog.

- If you have an image for your own project try that. If not, try creating a reference list entry for this image: Dorsiflexion of the fifth digit beyond 90° in a male patient with Ehlers-Danlos syndrome (openi)