

Monitoring and supporting student progress – At-risk evidence 2

With the new Blackboard Ultra, identifying an at-risk student, is as easy as monitoring analytics. Approximately every two weeks I check the status

Hi [Redacted]

You are at risk in this class. If there is a problem that I need to be aware of, kindly contact me.

Kind regards
Bronwyn

A screenshot of a Gmail email interface. At the top, there's a browser address bar showing various tabs like "afrikaans english", "Suggested Sites", "Research Professi...", "Analytics for Quali...", "Journal of Operati...", "AALHE 2020 Call f...", and "My Print Center". Below the browser bar, the Gmail header shows a search bar with a redacted name, navigation icons (back, forward), and a "+" icon. The main content area displays an email conversation. The first message is from "Bronwyn Claudia SWARTZ" dated "15/03/2024, 13:46". It starts with "Dear [redacted]" followed by two paragraphs of text praising the recipient's diligence and class attendance. The second message is from "[redacted]" dated "15/03/2024, 19:40", starting with "Thank you so much mam, I'm trying my hardest best to impress and make you proud. Thank you and have a safe holiday." At the bottom, there's a composition area with a toolbar containing icons for bold, italic, underline, link, etc., and a text input field with the placeholder "Type a message". A "Reply" button is visible at the bottom right.
