Abstract

Begin typing abstract here. Most abstracts are between 150-250 words. Do not write more than 300 words. Make sure to use double-spaced, Times New Roman 12 point font. The abstract is like the back or the inside cover of a work of fiction. It gives the reader a general understanding of what the paper will be about without giving away all the specific details. If necessary, look for examples of abstracts in scholarly journal articles to get an idea of how to compose. Make sure that you do not indent your paragraphs.

If you need another paragraph, simply press enter and begin typing. DO NOT copy and paste the introduction of the paper into the abstract. You can include a rephrased form of your thesis, but do not include your thesis statement verbatim: this will make your paper sound repetitious.

Full, Formal Title of Paper/Report

Begin your introductory paragraph here. Make sure to accomplish, at the least, 3 goals: engage your reader, establish your direction, and introduce your line of thought (state your thesis). Your thesis statement must be positioned as the last (or the second-to-last) sentence of your introductory paragraph. While writing a paper, it is prudent practice to reread the thesis often. At minimum, review the main points of the thesis before beginning each new section within the paper. To use this template, you need to make a copy! To do so:

Section Headings

If you have filled out your section headings on your outline, you can simply convert your titles into your paper's Section Headings. Make sure these words are centered, bolded, and typed in Times New Roman 12 point font. These headings should be as concise as possible; use minimal verbiage. Remember that there should be multiple paragraphs within each main section. Subheadings or subsections are not required in this course.

Section Headings

The second section should begin here. Make sure to refer to the example paper provided to see how the paper should be structured.

Section Headings

The third section should begin here. Make sure to refer to the example paper provided to see how the paper should be structured.

Conclusion

The paper's conclusion should have its own section heading. Make sure to refer to the example paper provided to see how the paper should be structured.

References

The references should be placed on their own page. Make sure your spacing is correct! For more information about creating your references page, refer to the APA manual style guide.
