Information Collection And Use

We collect several different types of information for various purposes to provide and improve our Service to you.

Types of Data Collected

GDPR

The EU General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) came into force in May of 2018. One of the reasons that the EU introduced the law is to give people more control over their personal data.

To prepare for the GDPR, companies have had to think carefully about their data protection and privacy practices.

One of the most important requirements for companies that fall under the scope of the GDPR is that they provide transparent and accessible information about the personal data they're processing. The way to do this is by having a clear and comprehensive Privacy Policy.

This article will discuss the requirements of the GDPR when it comes to your Privacy Policy, and help you create and display your own GDPR-compliant policy.

The GDPR covers the "processing" of "personal data." Article 4 \(1\) of the GDPR defines personal data as information that can be used "directly or indirectly" to identify a person. This is a very broad definition. Aside from the obvious things like a person's name, it can also include a person's:

- Email address

- Cookie data
- IP address (even where it's a dynamic IP address)

"Processing" is a broad term. The GDPR covers any sort of automated data processing activity or filing (electronic or otherwise). This might include:

- Asking your customers to fill out a contact form on your website
- Storing a list of phone numbers
- Sending direct marketing emails

According to Article 3 of the GDPR, the regulation applies to any person or organization that:

- Offers goods and services in the EU (whether they're charged for, or provided for free);
- Monitors the behavior of people in the EU.

So, your company might not be "offering goods and services" in the EU. But you will still fall under the GDPR if you:

- Target EU residents with advertising cookies, or
- Store your EU users' IP addresses in your log files
