The presidential threshold, which requires political parties or coalitions to secure a minimum percentage of parliamentary seats or votes to nominate a presidential candidate, has been widely debated in terms of its constitutionality and impact on democratic representation. The purpose of this study is to examine whether the policy aligns with the principles of popular sovereignty and fair elections as stipulated in the 1945 Constitution. Utilizing a normative legal research method, this paper explores constitutional provisions, decisions of the Constitutional Court, and academic interpretations. The findings indicate that although the Constitutional Court has upheld the policy, there remains a strong academic and public argument that it limits political participation and perpetuates oligarchic control in electoral processes. The study concludes that a constitutional reform or reinterpretation may be necessary to ensure broader political inclusiveness and the realization of democratic ideals in Indonesia's presidential election system. Keywords: Presidential Threshold, Constitutional Law, Political Participation.
