10. Introduction (Course Objectives)	"Social enterprise models combine the financial discipline of market capitalism with the passion and compassion required to create a more fair and just world." - Hilde Schwab, Chairperson and Co-founder, Schwab Foundation for Social Entrepreneurship.
	Today's crisis brings our financial, economic and governance systems to an unprecedented amount of challenges. The whole world is facing a strong socio-political uncertainty and societal distrust, while the acceleration of climate and demographic changes are demanding drastic political, cultural and technological (r) evolution.

Overall, in this course, we will engage in reflecting and thinking critically about the role and purpose of social entrepreneurship. All along the course, students' questioning about their own perceptions, aspirations and future role as a potential 'social' entrepreneur, responsible leader and/or a change-champion in organizations and society will be fostered. The course lays down the central idea that responsible leadership and decision-making are essential in different types of businesses and at all levels of the enterprise to develop activities that meet current and future societal needs and expectations in order to create positive impact.

This course will be based on three main elements:

- · Interactive lessons, complemented by readings (readings will be provided by the professor)
- · Individual work, reflection and opinion sharing through class discussions
- Group work on several topics inside and outside the class

13. Core reading	Kickul, J., & Lyons, T. S. (2020). Understanding social entrepreneurship: The relentless pursuit of mission in an ever changing world. Routledge.
14. Learning Outcomes	In this course our main ambition is twofold.
	· First, it is to support and develop the eagerness of young women and men seeking to prepare for a career by placing social responsibility and sustainable development at the heart of their professional ambition, learning and attitudes.
	· Second, it is to provide the students with theoretical, analytical, strategic and practical tools that must enable them to engage in critical thinking about the ethical, social and environmental dimensions of human activities and how social entrepreneurship can contribute towards addressing such wicked problems.

More specifically, the course aims at enabling students to build and extend upon knowledge, know-how, and savoir-être on identifying, evaluating and solving social problems through commercial means and through the innovative use of a wide range of resources. The course will equip students with references, models, and illustrations of best practices allowing them to approach and analyze philosophical, cultural, and strategic features, to evaluate their relevance from a societal impact perspective, and to sort out the various concurring social and environmental problems that the world is facing today.

At the end of this course, the students should have developed a reasonably comprehensive understanding of the importance of social responsibility and social entrepreneurship. In particular, the student should be able to:

- Define and identify societal problems generated through human and business activities,
- Apply theory to practice by emphasizing how 'social' entrepreneurial individuals can collaboratively contribute to the creation of positive social and environmental change,
- · Critically examine the values and ethical assumptions associated to 'social' entrepreneurial decisions,
- · Evaluate arguments for and against social entrepreneurship.

15. Location

All classes will be held at the Stockholm School of Economics in Riga (Strēlnieku iela 4a, Rīga, LV-1010, Latvia) unless otherwise specified. Ability to participate remotely will be provided to students located outside of Riga.
