

the most ever paid for a piece of art.

This was sold for $142.4 million in 1969 -

She likes the way the shadows look on the sand.

Ivy likes this one because the sun looks so pretty.

the building, and the different coloured skies, and the reflections on the water.

Ivy thinks this is really pretty, she likes the like a lollipop. She likes the colours.

Ivy thinks this looks a little like a rainbow, and a little

Ivy likes the colors in it, and that it reminds her of some art work she once did at school - the white bits in the painting, scratches in the paint, like a painting of fireworks.

Ivy likes this one because she loves going to the beach, and the water is so pretty.

Ivy likes that this is on a building. she likes all the colours used and she thinks that it looks really really really cool!

It's pretty gorgeous

Ivy really likes the poppies. She likes that there are just three colours used, and thinks it makes the paintings stand out.

Ivy thinks this is a lovely jungle painting, and the sea looks cool because it's by the beach.

Ivy would like to make one like this, but with our dog Leeloo.

Ivy likes the reflections on the water.

Ivy likes the line drawings in this one.

Looking back at the choices Ivy has made about what she likes, we can see that she really likes images with water in them, and she likes reflections in water as well. She quite likes nature images - flowers, beaches, landscapes - as well as lots of bright colours. Most of the images have many colours in the mix, with just a few focusing on a limited palette.