PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

Étienne wears his hair often on his face, and somewhat slick- made to look presentable at all times of day. His face is unusually unassuming, soft facial features with an equally unimpressive physical body. He is light on his feet and carries a single black glove on his hand.

His skin is pale and he is often seen sporting glasses.

EARLY LIFE/FOUNDATION ACTIVITIES

Étienne grew up in the coastal town of Menton, France, raised alone by his mother, Alicia. She had fled their original home in fear for her life and that of her sons. From a young age Étienne knew he had an interest in the law, and after reading 'The Constitution of the Fifth Republic' as a teenager he desired to pursue law.

Étienne went on to graduate from Université Panthéon-Assas and work as an Avocat in the city of Paris for a few years. He bounced from firm to firm, until he finally landed at Bredin Prat. His first anomalous incident was here.

Until the events of 'the grandfather paradox' he would never have an encounter with the anomalous, shortly after he was stationed at Site-06 as an investigator of the Internal security department, with an interest into the administrative side of the foundation. Despite his fondness for the unknown within the facility, he left after a brief tenure in the facility citing that 'a disagreement with leadership at the department' being his reason for departing.

POST-FOUNDATION TENURE

Étienne returned back to France, living in the south of Paris for a little while before getting word that his mother had fallen ill. During his stay back in Paris, he was approached by the foundation to pick up where he had left off- albeit, at the newly established Site-65. This is also where the 'grandfather paradox' incident took place. The offer was declined by Étienne. When he made it back to his hometown, it was made aware to him that his mother had already passed. Upon visiting the grave and laying beside it for a few hours, he was approached one last time by the foundation, this time Étienne took them up on the offer,

"Très bien. Tell me where I'm needed."
