

Borderline Forever Review

After about a month of no videos, Scott Woz has surprised everyone by coming back with a brand new movie-length video. While yes, this is still a YouTube video, it has the length, action, and story to be close enough to get a review. So here is my review.

What I Liked

I'm just going to cut right to the chase, this is definitely my favorite Scott the Woz video. It starts off with just Scott doing his thing and talking about stupid Nintendo games for about 30 minutes, and while this doesn't have much to do with the story, it's a great display of what I love about Scott the Woz, his ability to combine great comedy with video game talk, and once the story kicks off it contains even more of the best parts of Scott's videos, such as his friends. His friends are always so great and so funny in his more story based episodes, such as this one. This video also has a lot of great references to Scott the Woz videos of the past, and it had probably the best fight scene of 2021 so far, Scott and his friends fighting the Green Bay Packers with various weapons in a spaceship made of Wii games to an epic version of the Scott the Woz theme. Overall, this movie-length video was just a great watch for a Scott the Woz fan such as myself.

What I Disliked

While this is certainly big budget for a Scott the Woz YouTube video, you can still definitely tell it is a YouTube video. While most of the effects of the video do work well, such as the scene where Scott is in his brain, some parts don't work as well, such as a scene where Vince Young calls Scott from his spaceship, he's supposed to be calling from his spaceship, but he's clearly filming outside on his phone. There's also a few other moments where the YouTube style special effects just don't work with a story of this size.

Final Thoughts

Despite some minor annoyances due to some bad special effects, this is truly a great video that I highly recommend you check out, especially if you are a fan of Scott the Woz. If you aren't a fan of Scott the Woz, go watch Scott the Woz, he is my favorite YouTuber. This video has all the stakes and action that one would want in an action movie, but also the comedy and video game references you can only find in a Scott the Woz video, these things blend to make a unique experience unlike anything I have ever seen, so it gets an A-. That concludes my review of Borderline Forever. If you watched it, tell me what you thought about it. Did you like it or was it a video you did not enjoy? Please tell me your thoughts, and have a great day.
